Developing Your Career Goals

Career development is a process used throughout your life as you make changes in what you want to do, where and how you want to do it, and what you want in return. Jobs will come and go, and the skills required to do your work will continually change just as your interests, skills, and values change.

This process is not meant to be a short step-by-step process with a definite conclusion. You may find yourself backing up and going through some of the steps several times. Each time you cycle through the process, you are working closer toward more satisfying choices.

Throughout career development, it is common to experience confusion, anxiety, and fear since career decisions often impact many facets of your life. The important thing is to recognize these concerns and overcome them by utilizing the techniques outlined in this section. Take a few minutes to find out if any of the following statements sound like you.

MYTH: “My career has to meet all my needs.”
FACT: A career includes all of your life pursuits, both paid and unpaid. You can end up spending a lot of time looking for “the perfect career.” What you need to do is find out what is really important to you and balance your life so that you can satisfy desires that matter most.

MYTH: “I’m stuck with this major/degree.”
FACT: That is not exactly how it works. Just because you chose a major or graduated with a certain degree does not mean you are locked into that field. It is a degree that you selected based on information available to you at the time, not a life sentence. Career counselors can help you explore your options. Despite the myth, employers do not hire majors – they hire people who have the skills necessary to do the job. That means you can choose to work in a field other than your college major.

MYTH: “I have to make the absolute right decision, right now.”
FACT: Worrying about making the correct choice will just cause you stress. There are no absolute right or wrong answers. We all grow through life and make decisions because they seemed like the best idea at the time. One way you can feel more confident about your decisions is to do some research. Knowing that you researched your options and that you are making an informed decision should lighten the burden. Also, do not make your decision based solely on someone else’s ideas.

MYTH: “My job determines my worth.”
FACT: One definition of success is being happy with what you do. It is not about satisfying others’ expectations of what is good for you. You are the one who will be doing this job, not anyone else. Focus on what works for you. If you are happy, those who care about you will be too. By the way, you are more likely to be successful if you choose what you love. By doing so, you will feel more connected with purpose and fulfillment.

MYTH: “My first job will determine my entire career.”
FACT: On average, people have between three to five career changes in their lives. You might start out in one area and realize it is not what you wanted and try something else or your first job creates a career path that was unexpected and takes you in a different direction. This is normal.

Self-Assessments
Having difficulty figuring out what you want to choose as a major or career? One option is to take a self-assessment. These assessments, offered through Career Services, can help you explore many aspects about yourself as you search for a fulfilling major and career.

Career
Career counselors, like the ones at Career Services, help you explore your interests, skills, strengths, and values to discover what you want to do after graduation and develop a plan to help you get there.

Myers-Briggs Type Indicator
This assessment has helped millions around the world better understand themselves and how they interact with others, which is extremely important when choosing a career path. The Myers-Briggs assessment identifies four different elements of your personality: how you are energized, how you take in information, how you make decisions, and how you approach life. Your score report will provide a list of suggested careers based on your personality type.

Strong Interest Inventory
This assessment generates an in-depth assessment of your interests among a broad range of occupations. By providing insight into your interests, preferences, and personal styles you will be able to identify specific courses, occupations, internships, and activities you are likely to enjoy.

FOCUS 2
This assessment measures your interests, abilities, and values and helps you find a career that is right for you. FOCUS 2 will guide you through a reliable career and education decision-making model that will assist in choosing a major as well as help making informed decisions about your career.

Through this assessment, FOCUS 2 will evaluate your interests, skills, work values, personality, and leisure activities and create a comprehensive report that will guide you toward careers that best match you.

Choosing a Major
Choosing a major is not the same as choosing a career. What you get from completing a degree are skills, knowledge, interesting experiences, and the ability to be an independent learner. What you do with them is entirely up to you. It is true, however, that some professions do require certain degrees or certifications, such as teaching, engineering, architecture, or nursing, to name a few.

The more a career requires specialized expertise, the more necessary it is for you to have a related degree. Do not worry if you already have a major or have to choose one soon and you really have no idea what you want to do. If you choose a major that excites you, most likely you will work harder, do better, and find something you truly enjoy doing when you graduate.

Keep in mind, your first job after graduation is only the first step of many toward realizing your career goals. The creation of new job titles and career fields is continuous, so selecting a career is not a one-time decision, but an ongoing process.

Developing Your Skills
Obtaining a college degree is an important step in pursuing your career goals. However, a degree is no longer enough to be competitive. It is equally as important to develop your skills and abilities through experiences such as campus and community involvement, part-time work, and internships.

When evaluating a candidate’s ability, employers look beyond the knowledge gained in the classroom. They look for significant skills such as teamwork, communication, and organization. Most employers consider these skills equally as important as a degree and will often ask you to demonstrate in an interview how you have obtained these skills.

Making the connection from college to your career is easier than you think. Once you have decided on a major, it is time to enhance your employable skills by gaining experience through various activities.

In addition to developing your skills, you are building a network of people who can help you throughout your career development and job search process.

Gaining Experience
Gaining professional experience as a student not only helps you develop your skills and abilities, it also allows you to make valuable connections. Students gain experience through campus organizations, volunteer work, part-time jobs, and study abroad programs. Career Services can help you navigate these options as you develop your marketable skills.

Campus Involvement
Involvement in a student organization is a great way to develop valuable skills and expose yourself to your chosen field of study. UNLV has more than 350 academic, social, and special-interest student organizations that provide an excellent opportunity to develop leadership skills and network with industry professionals.

Many student organizations are linked directly to professional associations within a chosen field or industry that host informative meetings and networking events.

Taking on a leadership position within an organization can provide you the opportunity to facilitate meetings, organize events, mediate conflict, and oversee a budget. These opportunities will give you many occasions to demonstrate your mastery of these skills.

Volunteer Work and Community Involvement
Experience is still experience whether it is paid or unpaid. Offer to volunteer with an organization. It may only be a few hours a week or even a one-time event, but you will learn about a potential career and develop professional contacts. Volunteering and community involvement are excellent experiences to add to your resume because they demonstrate your dedication to social issues and/or an area of interest. It says a lot to an employer that you would seek out opportunities to gain experience even though you are not getting paid.

Class Projects
Many capstone classes offer students a chance to practice the concepts they are learning in class in a real-life context. It may feel like you are only doing a class project for class credit, however, a class project can be a valuable opportunity to demonstrate your knowledge of a subject area.

Part-time and On-campus Employment
Having previous work experience is a critical aspect of gaining future employment. Part-time, temporary, and even summer jobs offer an opportunity to develop important skills and demonstrate your ability to perform well as an employee.

Many college students downplay their work experience thinking it is not significant unless it is career-related. However, every job requires you to use many important skills, such as teamwork, communication, initiative, and adaptability. Do not underestimate the value of these part-time jobs. For example, “cashiering” demonstrates responsibility, organization, communication, and computer skills.

International Programs – Study Abroad
Participating in a study-abroad program is a significant and exciting part of completing a university degree. Graduates can gain an edge in the job market with their more in-depth understanding of language, culture, and diversity.

International internship opportunities may also be available, further enhancing your international work experience. For more information contact the Office of International Programs at CBC-B 325, 702-895-3896, or unlv.edu/internationalprograms.

- Facilitates the transition from student to employee by socializing you to the world of work
- Increases your confidence as you learn new skills
- Creates valuable experiences that enhance your resume
- Builds industry knowledge that allows you to create a realistic picture of a specific career

Also, prepare or update the following items as needed for your internship opportunity:
- Resume
- Cover letter
- References
- Interviewing skills (including your handshake)

If you need any assistance with researching or preparing for an internship, make an appointment with a career coach to receive one-on-one assistance.

What is an Internship?
Internships are opportunities to connect your classroom experiences in a professional organization through hands-on projects and direct exposure to the real world of work.

Internships can take many forms including part-time, full-time, paid, unpaid, and credit- or non-credit bearing experiences. Internships usually last three to six months and can occur at any time of the academic year. Typically, interns are juniors or seniors; however, sophomores should never shy away from an internship opportunity.

The National Association of Colleges and Employers (NACE) provides the following definition of an internship:

“An internship is a form of experiential learning that integrates knowledge and theory learned in the classroom with practical application and skills development in a professional setting. Internships give students the opportunity to gain valuable applied experience and make connections in professional fields they are considering for career paths; and give employers the opportunity to guide and evaluate talent.”

DID YOU KNOW?
- Career fairs and on-campus recruiting are the most effective recruiting methods used by employers.
- On average, 51.3 percent of interns transition into full-time positions.
- Employers expect to hire 3.4 percent more interns in 2017 than 2016.
- Planned social activities and paid holidays are the most widely offered benefits to interns.

These statistics were taken from the 2017 NACE Internship and Co-op Survey.

Hey!
What’s the Difference Between Credit and Non-credit Internships?

Credit
Credit internships allow a student to earn university course credit during the internship. Credit internships are offered through academic departments and Career Services. Each academic department sets its own criteria for awarding credit for internship experiences. Please check with these departments for further details.

Non-credit
Non-credit internships are not facilitated through a university department and are arranged and completed solely by the student. While these internships are independent, we encourage you to look for experiences that are beneficial to your goals and further facilitate the acquisition of the skills and qualifications that you desire.

Finding an Internship
To find the appropriate internship for you, utilize the resources available to you, including:

- Career Services Hire A Rebel
- Department internship coordinators (if applicable)
- Job and career fairs
- On-campus recruiting
- Academic advisors
- Faculty
- Networking
- Social media
- Company websites
- Job search engines

Recruitment for most internships occurs a semester in advance of the internship start date. However, depending on the industry or organization you are targeting, you may have to apply even earlier. Please check with your department internship coordinators or with the Career Services Assistant Director for Experiential Learning, Mentoring, and Operations for more information.

Resumes

Formatting Your Resume
The purpose of a resume is to get an interview, not a job! Typically, an employer will only spend 30 to 60 seconds looking at your resume before deciding whether or not to consider you for an interview. In most cases, a one-page resume is sufficient to convey the most significant information. Sometimes, it can be difficult to choose what to leave off; however, you do not want the employer to get bogged down reading a lengthy resume. You want the employer to immediately see that you have the necessary background and qualifications.

Individuals with more experience may need two pages if they have enough information to fill at least half of the second page. When designing your resume, it is important that your resume looks concise and consistent so the information is easy to read. You want it to look full without looking crowded.

There are many ways to organize and format your resume so you highlight the most relevant skills and experiences. To get you started, there are three basic types of resumes: chronological, functional, and hybrid resume. Note that the Curriculum Vitae has a specific function. All your resumes will be different and unique to your individual experience.

Chronological Resume
- This is the most common resume type and is preferred by most employers.
- This type of resume lists your work experience in descending order starting with your most recent job.
- This resume format stresses your work history.

Functional Resume
- A functional resume highlights your skills rather than your work history.
- A successful functional resume demonstrates how you have obtained a certain skill or ability through class work, volunteering, or leadership experience.
- This format is often used if you have limited work experience or if you are trying to break into a new career field and want to highlight your transferable skills.

Hybrid Resume
- This combination resume includes features of chronological and functional resumes.
- A hybrid resume contains a summary of your skills, or groups skill sets, in addition to work experience, in descending chronological order.

Curriculum Vitae (CV)
- A CV is recommended for use by graduate students and when searching for academic positions.
- A CV is a more comprehensive resume that elaborates on education and includes specialized training, presentations, publications, research, posters, and conferences.

Resume Formatting Structure
- Use standard font styles such as Times New Roman or Arial. All text on your resume should be the same size (10 to 12 point) except your name.
- All margins should be the same. Start with one-inch margins, but adjust to a smaller size if necessary.
- Use bullet points to highlight information.
- Section headings should be in bold and may also be capitalized or underlined for emphasis.

Addressing Gaps in Your Resume
No doubt you have heard the phrase, “Do not have gaps in your resume.” Employers understand that getting your education is your full-time job right now. Throughout high school and college, employers expect that you may have taken periods of time off and they look at more than just work experience when evaluating your qualifications. Do not worry about small gaps of time on your resume while you are pursuing your education. Having wide gaps in your resume is more of a concern once you have completed your education and started your career.
With that said, there are legitimate reasons to take time off of work and it does not necessarily mean that an employer will look negatively upon a gap. Here are some tips for addressing extensive gaps in your resume:

- Use years instead of months on your resume.
- Incorporate transferable skills that you developed during your time off.

Resume Headings

Contact Information

- Include your name, address, telephone number, and email address at the top of the resume.
- Make your name stand out by slightly increasing the font size (16 to 20 point) or making it bold.
- Use a professional email address with your name or use your UNLV email. Avoid using flashy email addresses.

Objective and Resume Summary

- Objectives are optional and typically unnecessary. If you include an objective, it should be a short phrase that outlines your career goals related to the position for which you are applying. You do not need an objective if your resume clearly shows your skills, accomplishments, and experiences related to the job.
- An objective alternative is a resume summary, which is also optional. A resume summary is a two- to four-sentence statement that provides an overall view of your background and skills.
- Objectives or resume summaries can be used if space filler is needed. Keep in mind, if you use either one of these elements, you will want to tailor your objective or resume summary to the position for which you are applying.

Education

- List your academic background in descending chronological order (most recent first).
- List each degree and the date you obtained that degree. If you are still working toward your degree, list the degree you are seeking along with your expected graduation date.
- You may want to emphasize a particular major or concentration within your degree.
- List the full name of the college or university you are attending and the location.
- Include your GPA if it is above a 3.0.
- It is not necessary to include high school or transfer information unless there are exceptional accomplishments or extensive experience relevant to the position for which you are applying.

- You may want to add a subheading called “Relevant Coursework” to list classes you have taken that illustrate your academic background in a particular area. It is very common for people in technical fields to have an extensive “Projects” section.

Work Experience

- List your job title and the name of the company on the left-hand side of the page. To make the title or company stand out, use italics or boldface.
- List the time period of your employment with the month and year. List it on the right-hand side of the page for a cleaner look.
- Use strong, action-oriented words and short phrases to describe your experience. Incorporate language from the actual job description into your resume to show how your experience is directly related to the skills required for the position to which you are applying.
- Quantify results and list accomplishments whenever it is possible.
- Utilize bullet points to make the information flow.
- Place the most relevant skills at the top of each skill set so employers can find them as easily as possible.

AVOID RESUME TEMPLATES

Resume templates, like the ones you find online, are not recommended. Templates force your information into a specific format and do not necessarily allow you to highlight your unique qualifications in the most effective way. Because templates utilize text blocks, the information is hard to manipulate around the page when you want to update your information. Instead, create your resume in a blank Microsoft Word document and follow the general guidelines in this section.
Activities, Honors, and Volunteer Experience
- List relevant leadership and/or volunteer experience just as you would list a job. Related unpaid experience is equally as important as work experience. Include your title, organization name, dates, and important skills.
- Extracurricular, volunteer, athletic, and/or leadership activities can be included in a single section, or separate sections, depending on how many of each category you have to show.
- You can simply list your experiences or describe them in greater detail depending on the relevant skills you would like to highlight.

Computer, Language, and Technical Skills
- This section is used to show concrete skills, including language proficiency, computer, technical, laboratory, or others that are relevant to the position.
- Do not include soft skills such as communication, leadership, or problem solving. They are too vague to add value to the resume presentation.

Highlighting Your Skills
The secret to writing an effective resume is to tailor your resume in a way that best highlights the most relevant information to the position for which you are applying. Unlike an employment application, a resume does not necessarily list every experience you have ever had. Create section headings to reflect your background. For example, if you are applying for a manager position and have previous management experience, you should create a section named “Managerial and Leadership Experience.”

Applicant Tracking Systems
Often, resumes and/or online applications are initially screened through a computer database by keywords to determine if you have the experience necessary for the position before the resume is viewed by an actual person. Use keywords and industry language to ensure that your resume or application makes it through the initial screening process.

References
References should not be included on a resume. You may submit references as a separate document when requested. When employers ask for a reference, they are asking for the name of someone who they can contact to learn more about you. It is very important to choose your references carefully.

Choosing Your References
- Select three to five individuals who know you professionally, such as a supervisor, professor, and/or advisor.
- It is very important you ask permission prior to listing someone as a reference because you want to make sure he or she will give you a positive reference.

Hey!

RESUME TIPS

Do
- Create a clean, professional appearance with a simple, well-organized format.
- Keep your resume on one page.
- Begin phrases with strong action verbs that emphasize your accomplishments.
- Have a career counselor review your resume.
- Print hard copies on high-quality paper.
- Use a simple, clean font.

Don’t
- Use flashy graphics, clip art, or pictures.
- Round up your GPA: keep it at two decimals.
- Exaggerate your experience or your job titles.
- Include personal information such as social security number, age, etc.
- Write from the first-person point of view.

Do not wait until the last minute to create or edit your resume. Resumes take time to prepare and refine. Bring a draft of your resume to Career Services for a thorough resume critique. Always keep your resume updated with current information, positions, awards, and certifications.

Dear Ms. Danvers:

Please accept my application to the Hospitality Coordinator position with Fury Winery. My interest in Fury Winery comes from your company’s commitment to the environment, your evolving portfolio of wines, and most importantly the fact that you have been a family-run business for over 80 years. Having worked for a family-run business during my internship last summer, I understand the added time and exceptional service level that goes into the daily operations of a family business. Fury Winery continues to hold a reputation across the world as being an innovator in the winemaking industry.

Currently, I am a junior studying Hospitality Management at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. I just finished a Front Desk Internship at a five-star, family-owned business where I worked with over 80 guests per day. My ability to multitask shined during my internship with answering multiple phone calls coming in through five lines, checking in and out guests, and coordinating with housekeeping or room service for guests. I received two compliments on comment cards about my high level of service. Prior to my internship, I was a Server at UNLVino Fundraising Event where I gained valuable knowledge on wines, specifically on Fury Winery. The Andre’ is the best-selling brand of sparkling wine due to its strawberry and peach flavors along with the Barefoot Wine brand which has become the fastest growing wine among Forbes “Top 5 Wine Brands”. My passion for Fury Winery’s Brand and my five star standard experiences in customer service make me a perfect fit for the Hospitality Coordinator position.

I am eager to join the Fury Winery team to learn more about the company’s vision as well as contribute to the company’s growth. Enclosed is my resume for your reference. Please contact me anytime at (702) 867-5309 or cjames@gmail.com. I look forward to hearing from you soon. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Cameron James

Before You Start Your Search
Job searching can be an overwhelming process and may take longer than you would like. You have probably heard the phrase, "looking for a full-time job is a full-time job."

Conducting a job search does not necessarily take 40 hours a week, but it does require you put in the work it takes to be a competitive candidate.

Especially in a tough job market, it is more important than ever to do everything in your power to enhance your presentation as a candidate and to utilize a combination of job search methods to ensure your success.

Know Yourself
You will be more successful in your job search if you are confident that your experience and skills qualify you for the position for which you are applying. To do this, you must have a clear idea of your skills, interests, accomplishments, experience, goals, and values. For clarity, you may want to see a career coach in Career Services.

Pay Attention to Detail
Tailor your resume, cover letter, online application, and interview answers specifically to each position for which you have applied.

Match Yourself to the Right Position
Thoroughly research the position and organization to which you are applying and make certain you are a good fit. Think about products and services offered, growth, competitors, number of employees, organizational structure, geographic locations, working climate, benefits, community involvement, and anything else that you consider important.

Be Focused
Be persistent and follow up. Keep careful records of your job search process, including all materials used in the job search: resumes, references, recommendation letters, cover letters, job postings, research conducted on employers, correspondence from employers, and any other relevant materials.

Have a Positive Attitude
Be flexible in a tough job market. This could mean being willing to relocate, expand your horizon from the ideal job to more tangentially related areas, or accept a more entry-level position than anticipated. College graduates are promotable. Keep perspective and know that behind every slowdown and downturn in history there is a recovery, so keep your eye on the long run.

Networking
The word “networking” often conjures up unsettling feelings among college students. Networking is not asking for a job; it is developing a broad range of contacts. The key to networking starts before the job search. For college students, involvement on campus is one way to build a cadre of supportive colleagues and alumni down the road. In particular, students should pursue involvement with professional associations related to their field of study, both on and off campus. Professional associations bring leaders of organizations to meetings and these can be key contacts for referral to professional opportunities.

Networking is not a magical process, but rather the art of opening up conversation and engaging another individual. Be curious about the individuals you meet and engage them in questions about themselves and their careers. Follow up with individuals who interest you. Share your appreciation and ask for more information. You may want to arrange an informational interview — a face-to-face meeting — to get first-hand information and advice about pursuing your career field of interest. What is most important is that you always smile and present yourself positively and professionally.

Essentially, networking is simply talking to people. People love to share their expertise and knowledge when they can. They have been in your shoes and remember how hard it was. The easiest way to break the ice is to start with the people you know — friends, trusted colleagues, relatives, former classmates, professors, and advisors.

Arranging personal visits to professionals in your field of interest, attending professional events and educational sessions, and visiting employment centers or departments where you desire to work can make a major difference in employment leads and eventual job offers.

Informational Interviews
The purpose of informational interviewing is to learn more about an occupation or industry in which you are interested. An informational interview is not a time to ask for a job. However, it can lead to building a network of professionals inside a field or company which may open up opportunities for future employment opportunities.

To arrange an informational interview, you can email, call or send a letter to the person you would like to interview. Most people remember what it was like to be in your shoes and are happy to help. If the person declines your offer, ask for a referral to someone else and thank the person for his or her time.

Sample Questions to Ask During an Informational Interview
● What training is required for this type of work?
● What personal qualities or abilities are important to being successful in this field/position/company?
● How did you end up in this position? What has been your career path?
● What do you do on a typical day in this position?
● What part of this job do you find the most challenging or most satisfying?
● What are the hot issues in this field?
● How many hours do you typically work in a week?
● What is the corporate culture here?
● What advice would you give a person entering this field?
● How does your job fit into the organization?
● How do you find out about job openings in this field?

A SAMPLE SCRIPT FOR SETTING UP AN INFORMATIONAL INTERVIEW
“Hello, my name is ________________ and I am currently a junior at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. I am majoring in psychology and I am interested in your field of work.

I am trying to determine my future career direction and was wondering if you would mind sharing your insight with me. Would you be willing to spend 20 to 30 minutes with me to discuss your experiences?

I am happy to meet you at your office at a time that is convenient for you.”

Dress professionally when going to your informational interview. Bring a notebook and prepared questions. Be punctual and polite. Remember to listen attentively and express your gratitude to the person for sharing his or her time and insight. Be sure to get his or her business card and send a thank-you email or letter.
On-Campus Recruitment

On-Campus Interviews
On-campus interviews are an important tool to save you time and energy in your job search process. Recruiters from across the country and abroad come to UNLV to interview qualified candidates to fill their full-time, part-time, and internship openings. On-campus interview opportunities are available through Hire A Rebel.

Information Booths
Information booths are excellent opportunities for employers to meet with students one-on-one in various locations throughout the campus. Information booths typically lead into an Information Session for a larger group of interested candidates.

Information Sessions
Many employers coming to campus will also host Information Sessions for candidates and others who want to learn more about their organizations. These presentations are an integral part of the interview process and an excellent way for you to meet recruiters interested in hiring UNLV students and alumni.

Career Fairs
Career Services hosts several job fairs for all majors each academic year for students and alumni. Students are encouraged to attend in order to network with human resources and corporate personnel. You can obtain career information, learn about current and future openings, gather information critical to your job search, and possibly apply for a job. Visit unlv.edu/careerservices for detailed information.

Career Fair Tips
● Review the list of attending employers on the Career Services website and research those of interest to you prior to each fair: unlv.edu/careerservices.
● Make sure your resume has been proofread and is ready to sell your skills. Visit Career Services to have a counselor review your resume to make sure it is ready to share with potential employers.
● Bring enough copies of your resume so you can present one to each organization that interests you. Keep in mind, there may be last-minute employer additions at the event.
● Prepare a 30-second introduction about yourself that quickly tells the employer the kind of position in which you are interested.
● Practice your interviewing skills. Even though this is a fair, the employer still may ask you questions about your experience so you need to be prepared. You may also be invited for an interview following the fair.
● Dress to impress! This will be your first impression with the employers you meet and you want it to be positive.

Comfortable shoes are recommended since you will be walking and standing, but make sure they are professional.

Ask company-specific questions to employers and start building relationships that can lead to opportunities later.

Collect business cards and follow up with organizations you interacted with at the fair.

Online Applications

Online applications are a common way to apply for a position with a company or organization. Many of the same guidelines you use for a resume are true for an online application as well. Just like a resume, an online application is the first impression you give an employer. It is a reflection of your professionalism, maturity, and attention to detail.

It is essential you complete all of the fields in an online application. Do not leave any fields blank. Do not say “see resume.” Online applications can take anywhere from one to two hours to complete, so take your time and be sure to tailor your application to the position for which you are applying. Use keywords from the job description. Check your spelling and grammar and use appropriate punctuation.

Be honest on your application. Answer all the questions about criminal records, driving records, and reasons for leaving a previous position honestly. Employers will discuss the circumstances of your responses during the interview but it is important that you are straightforward from the beginning. When answering questions about your previous experiences, be positive and talk about the lessons you have learned.

Attach a resume and cover letter with your application and follow up with a personal email to a recruiter, if possible, letting him or her know you have submitted your online application.

Recruitment Policies

Recruiters spend a lot of time, money, and effort locating the right people for their organizations through the use of Career Services. In order for Career Services to attract and retain companies interested in hiring UNLV students and alumni, you must act with the highest degree of professionalism. This includes providing accurate information and following through on all commitments made.

Students and alumni who use Hire A Rebel will be held accountable for their actions, in accordance with Career Services’ policies, as follows:

Interview Appointments

Interviews scheduled online through on-campus interviews or in person at UNLV job fairs are important commitments on behalf of both the candidates and the recruiters. Students or alumni who fail to show up for an appointment or cancel with less than a 24-hour notice damage the university’s reputation, waste the recruiter’s time, and may cost another person a job or internship opportunity. Interview appointments can be canceled online through Hire A Rebel up to 48 hours before the interview date. For cancellations with less than a 48-hour notice or to cancel interviews scheduled at our job fairs, please call Career Services at 702-895-3495.

Cancellations with less than a 24-hour notice will normally require a letter of apology to the recruiter. Failure to follow these guidelines can lead to suspension from Hire A Rebel for the rest of the semester and cancellation of other on-campus interviews already scheduled.

Student Profiles on Hire A Rebel and Resumes

The information you enter into your Hire A Rebel profile is used to determine eligibility for on-campus interviewing opportunities. It is your responsibility to ensure your information remains current and accurate. Your resume and other documents you provide to recruiters (either online or in person) should also be current and accurate. Intentional falsification of profile information or resume information can result in suspension from Hire A Rebel for the rest of the semester, cancellation of on-campus interviews, and referral to the Office of Vice President for Student Affairs for possible disciplinary action in accordance with the UNLV Student Conduct Code.

SUBMITTING YOUR RESUME ELECTRONICALLY

Email your resume as a PDF document when possible. Utilize your name in the file name when saving your documents. Follow up with a simple email to the employer to ensure your materials were received. If the employer requests a text or scannable resume, keep formatting simple and avoid underlining, italics, bullet points, boldface fonts, and lines.

Using Social Media Wisely
Social media can be a powerful tool in your job search. Used correctly, social media can help you find job opportunities and connect with people who can assist you in your search. But with the wrong content, social media can also cost you a job opportunity or even your job.

A majority of employers use social media in their recruitment efforts as well as researching candidates during the application process. When a hiring manager searches your name, you want to ensure the content is professional and represents you well.

Here are some helpful tips on how to use social media to leverage your job search:

Create Your Online Presence
You only get one first impression - make it a good one. Present yourself online just as you would in person. Use an appropriate profile photo, do not use profane language, avoid grammatical and spelling errors, and do not make negative, insulting posts, or charged posts. Employers are looking for positive and professional team members to serve as an extension of their company.

Make a professional impact online by showing that you are interested in your prospective field. Share industry insights and post links to interesting stories. Do not forget to showcase your professional qualifications, experiences, and skills on your social media accounts and keep your information current.

Your profiles should include keywords that a recruiter or hiring manager might type into a search engine. Research the types of jobs you are looking for and include keywords in your online profiles so you stand out.

Research and Engage Online
Social media is not just for recruiters. It is also an effective way to research a company or industry professionals so you are prepared when you interview or are networking. Follow a company’s social media accounts to stay current on their news and to research professionals with whom you may interview.

Professional networking sites were designed to connect professionals. Do not be afraid to use those functions to your advantage. Be mindful of when a company posts information by commenting, liking their updates, or sharing their information. Join groups that pertain to your field of interest to network and to broaden your knowledge of the field and industry trends.

Another key online resource are your fellow UNLV alumni. They can provide you with valuable insights about companies you may be interested in and provide connections within those companies. Join the many UNLV social media networks and the UNLV Alumni Association Facebook and LinkedIn groups to leverage this key resource.

Protect Your Online Presence
Once you have your social networks set up, it is important to keep your information and your privacy settings up to date. Social media sites can change their privacy policies so do not assume that private settings mean everything is private. Consider anything you put online will never go away and approach content as if it will be public.

It is a good idea to search yourself occasionally so you know what is on the Internet when people search for you. If anything questionable shows up, remove it if you can. A few recommendations to minimize harmful content would be to delete any of your own unprofessional posts, untag yourself from questionable pictures, and remove any derogatory third-party links. Even if your privacy settings are on, it does not mean a recruiter cannot find it.

Maximize Your Job Search With LinkedIn
Think of LinkedIn as a more dynamic and visual representation of your resume. It provides a snapshot of your professional experience and interests so you can make a strong first impression when networking contacts online. With over 500 million members worldwide, LinkedIn is the go-to resource for professional networking.

Here are some tips for creating an effective LinkedIn profile:

- URL: When you first set up your LinkedIn profile, change the URL so it is something easy to remember and type, such as your name.
- Headline: Keep your headline short and engaging. Employers should know what you are looking for right away. For example, “UNLV honor student seeking marketing position.”
- Photo: Upload a photo of yourself professionally dressed with a plain background.
- Summary: Your summary is a short version of your qualifications and goals. Describe what motivates you. You can focus on your soft skills in this section to enhance the other elements of your profile.
- Education: Include the degree you are seeking or have earned and your declared major(s) and minor(s). Show off your GPA, test scores, honors, and awards if they are relevant to the type of job you are seeking. High school should not be listed once you are in college.
- Experience: List your work experience including part-time employment, internships, involvement with clubs or organizations, and volunteer work. Photos or examples of your projects are a great addition.
• Recommendations: Try to include at least one recommendation for each position you have held. Ask managers, professors, or classmates with whom you have worked closely for a written recommendation.

• Skills and Expertise: Include keywords that represent your skills and that potential recruiters may be searching. You can find relevant ones in job listings and profiles of people who are working in your field of interest.

Once you have your LinkedIn profile created, it is time to start networking. Here are a few things to keep in mind:

• Start Building: Assemble a network of people you know or have interacted with and who are in professional positions. When asking them to connect with you, send a personalized invitation.

• Get Connected: Join groups as a way to reach out to potential networking contacts. Start with your university and industry groups.

• Be Active: Post updates regularly to help you stay on your network’s radar and to build your professional image. Mention your projects or the professional events you are attending.

Interviewing

Preparing for Your Interview
Interviews provide a potential employer the opportunity to learn more about you and for you to learn more about an employer. At this point, the employer has reviewed your resume and is familiar with your qualifications. Employers are looking more at your soft skills such as interpersonal skills, teamwork, and professionalism. The interview allows you to showcase your communication skills by articulating the qualifications that make you the best candidate for the position and company.

Employers are looking for a good fit; someone who has the right background and personality to blend in well with the company. Attitude and personality are just as important as qualifications. Be yourself, but be your best self. Preparing for an interview is equally as important as the interview itself and will help you feel relaxed and confident during the interview.

Know Yourself
Spend some time familiarizing yourself with your qualifications and accomplishments by looking over your resume. Get to know your personal attributes and skills by taking a self-assessment (see page 5 for more details). Think about your career goals—where do you see yourself down the road?

Research the Company
Doing your homework not only impresses the recruiter, but also helps you choose the company that is most suited to you. Demonstrating the fact you have researched a company can set you apart from other candidates. Employers want people who know something about their company before they step into the interview room.

Prepare Answers to Interview Questions
Review a list of common interview questions and practice your answers. Not every interview will be the same, but preparing answers to some common questions will help you focus on the most important information to convey during an interview.

Practice answering questions in front of a mirror or role-play with a career counselor or a close friend who can give you constructive feedback. The important thing is not to memorize your answers, but to become familiar enough with the information that you can confidently express yourself to the employer. Practice your interviewing skills by participating in a videotaped mock interview through Career Services.

Prepare Questions to Ask the Employer
At the end of almost every interview, the employer will ask you if you have any questions for them. This is a great time to show off your knowledge of the company and your enthusiasm for the position. Asking intelligent questions lets the interviewer know that you are interested, which could set you apart from other candidates. It is always a good idea to prepare a few questions in advance. Here are a few sample questions you can ask:

- What do you like most about working for this company?
- What attracted you to this company?
- What are your company’s goals in the next few years?
- What qualities are you looking for in a successful candidate for this position?
- Could you describe a typical day in this position?
- Who are the people I would be working with in this position, and what are their roles?
- Why are you filling this position?

Questions to Avoid
Avoid asking questions about salary, vacation, holidays, and/or sick-day schedules. Let the employer approach these issues first. You want to show your interest in the employer and position and not your own personal desires.

Phone and Webcam Interviews
Phone and webcam interviews are used to screen candidates early in the interview process as a cost-saving technique before inviting candidates for an on-site interview. They can be with one person or a panel of people and can last anywhere from 10 minutes to one hour.

Helpful Tips for Electronic Interviews
- Give yourself a minimum of 30 minutes when scheduling your interview. You do not want to cut the interviewer off or rush through your interview.
- Make sure your phone or laptop is fully charged or is plugged in.
- Create a quiet place free of distractions from pets, visitors, television, children, or other phone calls.
- Have your resume, job description, questions for the interviewer, pen, paper, and other prepared notes in front of you. However, do not get distracted by shuffling papers during the interview.
- Make a note of everyone on the other end of the interview when they introduce themselves and use their names throughout the interview whenever possible.

Tips for Phone Interviews
- Do not interrupt your interview to take another call if you have call waiting.
- Be aware that walking around the room may affect your signal. It is recommended you use a landline to avoid dropped calls.
- Answer the call with your name to avoid an awkward start to the interview.
- Smile when you talk – your enthusiasm will be heard by the interviewer.
- You cannot count on clues from an interviewer’s body language, so avoid being too long-winded. Pauses are a normal part of phone interviews and are often because the interviewer is trying to avoid interrupting you. Stay focused, calm, and friendly.
Tips for Webcam Interviews

- Create a professional webcam username.
- Log in early so the employer knows you are prepared.
- Dress professionally from head to toe. The employer may ask for a full-body shot.
- Look directly into the camera and avoid wandering eyes.
- Avoid leaving the camera view until the interview is completely finished.
- Set up the camera view in a professional, clean setting.
- Adjust any light sources in the room to highlight your face, with no lights shining into the camera.
- Test out your webcam, microphone, and speakers before your interview to make sure they are working properly. Practice with a career counselor or friend so that you can make sure the equipment is working on the other end.
- Make sure your area has a strong internet connection to avoid dropped calls.
- Do not forget to use positive body language, just as if you were having the interview in person: good posture, hand gestures, and facial expressions.

Dressing Professionally

Most experts agree that 80 percent of an interviewer’s opinion of a candidate is based solely on his or her first impression. Professional dress, positive body language, and a well-groomed appearance are important components of that first impression.

Dress codes vary by company and industry, making it difficult to decide the most appropriate interview attire. Some employers have adopted business casual dress policies for everyday wear, but that does not necessarily mean you should dress casually for the interview. Find out how professionals within a certain company or field dress by reviewing company literature, stopping by the office, or asking someone who works in that particular industry.

You may be concerned that you are not the suit-and-tie type. Your individuality is important, but you will have plenty of opportunities to display your unique style once you have the job. Use the interview to determine the culture of the company, including dress policies, but do not give the employer any reason to select someone else over you before they have had a chance to get to know you.

Avoid Strong Fragrances

Wear deodorant, but do not wear perfume, cologne, or aftershave. The interviewer may not have the same taste as you, and you do not want to overpower the room.

Be Well Groomed

Clean nails, showered, good breath, and a neat hairstyle are always crucial. Shined shoes and fresh clothes that are crisply ironed are also important. Bring some mints.

Test Drive Your Interview Outfit

It is a good idea to try out your interview outfit once or twice before the interview so you know how you feel in it while walking, sitting, and standing. Also, make sure your suit fits well. If it does not, have it altered. A well-fitted suit looks professional and gives you confidence.

Avoid Items That Scream “Student”

Backpacks, gigantic water bottles, and other campus gear are not necessary at an interview. Also, turn your cell phone OFF! Even a cell phone on vibrate is enough of a nuisance and distraction during an interview to turn off a potential employer.

Less Is More

Keep your look simple. Wear minimal jewelry and conceal body piercings or tattoos.

WHAT IS BUSINESS CASUAL?

You may be invited to a recruiting event where the recommended dress is business casual. Business casual is not as formal as a full interview suit, but not as casual as what you wear to class. When in doubt as to what is appropriate, simply ask. Err on the side of caution; it is best to dress up rather than dress down.

Men: Khakis, trousers, or suit pants can be paired with a knit shirt, or a collared, long-sleeved shirt that does not demand a tie. Add a leather belt, hard-soled shoes, and dark colored socks, and you will be well within the range of appropriate business casual dress. Leave the athletic shoes at home.

Women: Tailored shirts or blouses paired with skirts or slacks are appropriate business casual choices. Other choices include a jacket or sweater set. Shoes should not show the toes. Do not confuse “after five” attire with business attire.

INTERVIEWING TIPS

- Arrive at least 10 minutes early. Drive the route the day before if necessary.
- Bring extra copies of your resume and your reference list.
- Carry a leather-bound folder for taking notes or carrying handouts.
- Present positive body language by smiling and making eye contact.
- Make a good impression by shaking hands and remembering and using people’s names.
- Treat everyone with whom you come in contact respectfully, including the front-desk receptionist.
- Make small talk easily so you will come across as easy-going and relaxed.

Answering Interview Questions
It is normal to be nervous during an interview. Take a deep breath and keep the tone conversational. Some interviewers may ask you a set of predetermined questions while others may be more conversational and ask open-ended questions based on your resume. Find a good balance between listening and speaking.

Listen and Observe
Try to follow the interviewer’s lead and watch for signals from the employer as to whether your responses are too short or too long. Adapt to the interviewer’s style.

Practice Patience
Do not let a tough question throw you off. Do not be afraid to ask for clarification if needed, and give yourself time to think before responding.

Stay Positive
Always speak positively of past experiences and previous employers. Emphasize what you learned from past experiences; not what you did not like.

Develop a Personal Theme
Know three good reasons why you are an outstanding candidate for the position and/or company and weave them into the interview.

Be Enthusiastic
Communicate your passion for this particular position, company, and industry. At the end of the interview, let the interviewer know that you are interested in this position.

Use Positive Body Language
Refer to our Verbal and Non-Verbal Communication Tips on the next page.

Be Specific: Use the STAR Method
Do not just say, “I’m a good manager.” Give an example of how you have demonstrated good management skills. Describe a Situation, the Tasks defined in the situation, the Actions you took, and the Results of those actions. Using examples is one of the most important components of good interviewing!

Behavior-Based Interview Questions
Behavior-based interviewing has become a common interviewing technique. In this type of interview, interviewers will ask you to describe a specific example of a past behavior in order to predict future behavior.

For example, an interviewer might ask, “Tell me about a time when you had to work under intense pressure to meet a deadline.” In this case, the interviewer wants you to describe an actual situation using specific details, how you handled the situation, and the outcome of the situation.

Tell the interviewer a good story with the details of the situation. An interesting story makes you a more memorable candidate. Coming up with detailed examples of specific past events on the spot can be difficult. Use the sample questions below as a guide to get started. Think of situations you have handled in previous work and school experiences.

Sample Behavioral Interview Topics
- Tell me about a difficult situation you dealt with.
- Describe a time when you had to assist a colleague.
- Give me an example of a time when you had to defend your idea.
- Describe a time you found it necessary to make an unpopular decision.
- Give me an example of when you had to work on a team with someone you could not get along with and how you resolved it.

Sample Interview Questions
Here are some standard questions that you may be asked during an interview along with suggestions of how to craft your answers. It is important to practice what you will say in advance so you are comfortable when answering during the actual interview.

Tell me about yourself.
Keep your answer brief and concise (60-90 seconds). Highlight your academic background, work experience, and personal attributes relevant to the position. Express your enthusiasm for the position and your desire to work for the company.

Why do you want to work for this company?
Tell a story about how you first became interested in this type of work. Point out how your previous experience shows a long-term interest in this industry. Explain why their company is the best fit for you based on your experience and future goals.

How do you stay current on issues in this industry?
Demonstrate a natural interest in the industry by describing publications or associations that you follow.

Where do you see yourself in three years?
Your answer should reflect your interest in staying involved with the company so the employer knows you are a good investment. Having future goals demonstrates motivation and focus.

What qualifications do you have that will make you successful in this position?
Be specific. Remember to use examples of how you have demonstrated two or three skills in your previous experience.

What is one thing you need to work on?
Be honest, but put a positive spin on it. Recognizing your limitations shows maturity. Tell the employer what you have learned from your experience and how you have already worked to improve this shortcoming.

Describe your working relationship with your colleagues.
The employer is trying to gauge your interpersonal skills. Emphasize your ability to fit in with many different personality types and your willingness to be a part of the team.
Give an example of a challenging experience and how you overcame it. Tell a story about a previous work or group project experience where you were able to problem solve. Describe how you were able to adapt, be flexible, and help be a part of a positive solution. An employer will want someone who is able to be proactive and maintain a positive work environment.

What do you like to do in your spare time? The employer will ask a question like this to find out a little more about your personality. Describe your interests so the interviewer can learn more about you, but avoid overshar ing. Focus on positive and productive activities.

Additional Interview Questions
- What did you enjoy most/least about your previous job?
- Why are you the best person for this position?
- What do you know about our company?
- Why are you interested in this position?
- Why did you select your major?
- How has college prepared you for your career?
- What accomplishment are you most proud of and why?
- What can you contribute to this organization?

Employer Research
guides.library.unlv.edu/careers

How Informed Are You?
As you explore potential employers, look beyond the information provided by the company’s website to gain a thorough understanding of its activities by using reputable resources provided by the UNLV Libraries at this link: guides.library.unlv.edu/careers

Why Research a Company?
- As a student, you have exclusive access to premium content through the UNLV Libraries that will give you a competitive edge.
- Uncover a complete picture about your future employer, its activities, competitors, business strategies, financial health, and the industry.
- Use this knowledge to craft informed questions to ask during the interview that will enable you to describe your strengths and experience to the company. Ensuring you are the best fit for the company will lead to success in your future.

Company Profiles
Why are profiles useful for your job search? Profiles are descriptions of the company that may contain:
- Company history
- Financials
- Organizational structure and more

Profiles will provide you a great starting resource for you to uncover information about potential employers.

A Note About Public, Private, and Non-profit Research
Look for news articles and press releases to discover information about current or future projects and potential opportunities when profiles are not available.

Career Outlook
What does the future hold for your chosen field? What are the average salaries for your chosen career? What will a typical day be like at your ideal company? Search the following sources for the answers:

Occupational Outlook Handbook: bls.gov/ooh
Learn more about your chosen career field by exploring working conditions, education needed, potential earnings, and expected job prospects in a wide range of occupations.

Vault Career Intelligence: guides.library.unlv.edu/careers
Research background information about companies, schools, internships, and industries. Also, search for current job openings, get essential advice on resumes, interviews, networking, and more to help you launch your career. In order to maintain off-campus access to this database after graduation, you will need to create an account on-campus prior to graduation.

Industry and Market Research
Learn about the opportunities and threats facing the industry you are entering. This type of information will help job seekers understand how the market is fairing and what the future may hold for employment.

Company Culture
Understanding company culture will help you examine whether your skills and career values align with your selected employer.

Read social media posts (Linkedin, Facebook, Twitter, etc.) to identify stories or information that indicate a company values and new initiatives.

Resources such as Glassdoor.com or the Vault Career Intelligence database provide feedback from past and current employees about specific positions within a company. It is important to consider the credibility of the information provided. Are there consistent complaints about a department within a company or are there a few disgruntled employees providing negative feedback?

Trends and News Articles
Locate breaking news and changes about a variety of companies and their industries by searching newspapers and trade publications. Discover potential job opportunities that fit your qualifications.

When faced with an illegal/personal question, you essentially have three choices:
1. Answer the question, assuming you do not mind sharing the information.
2. Refuse to answer the question, knowing that you may risk appearing uncooperative or confrontational.
3. Answer the underlying job-related question. (recommended by Career Services)

Question: Are you planning to have a family?

Intent: Are you willing to travel or relocate?

Answer: I am committed to my career and willing to travel or relocate if needed.
If You Do Not Get the Job

If you do not get the job, do not think you wasted your time. Keep in mind that you have made important contacts within the company. You can send a short letter or email to the hiring manager or human resources thanking them for their time and to keep you in mind for future positions.

Reiterate your qualifications and your fit with the position and/or company. Be direct and state your interest in the position. Remember to smile and leave them with a positive feeling about your interview.

Fewer than half of all candidates send a follow-up letter. Sending a thank-you letter is not only professional and polite, but it could give you the edge that sets you apart from other candidates.

Toward the end of the interview, the employer will indicate a general time for when they will contact you. Only call the employer if the date has passed. If they did not specify a time, politely call or email and ask them about the status of their hiring decision.

Handling a Job Offer

Congratulations! You are hired! Verify the terms of your employment in writing. Most companies will send a letter as a standard practice. Ask the employer when you will receive a letter verifying the offer. It should confirm your salary, start date, location, job title, benefit information, and pre-employment requests such as the completion of a drug test. You should also send a letter verifying your acceptance with the same information.

Know the Salaries in Your Field

Most employers complain that new graduates have unrealistic expectations about starting salaries. Research salary ranges for your field, keeping in mind geographic location. Salaries differ among metropolitan, suburban, and rural areas. Search the internet for a cost-of-living calculator to determine the amount of money you will need to earn in a specific location to accommodate your needs.

Managing Multiple Job Offers

Receiving multiple job offers is exciting, but it can also be confusing. Ask employers how much time they are willing to give you to consider an offer before they need a decision. If offered a position, you should not be expected to make a decision on the spot. Analyze various offers by weighing the importance of certain criteria such as salary, location, job duties, benefits, opportunity for growth, company atmosphere, and work-related values (job security, contribution to society, work/life balance).

TIPS FOR DINING OUT WITH A POTENTIAL EMPLOYER

Lunch or dinner during an interview may seem like a casual event, but in reality, this is still part of the interview. Making small talk is just as important as answering questions. You are being critiqued on your social skills and how well you handle yourself during a meal.

- Order something that is easy to eat, not something time-consuming or messy. This is not the occasion for a whole lobster or barbecue ribs.
- Alcohol is not a good idea unless the host orders wine for the table. In that case, sip slowly and have only one glass if you are of legal drinking age.
- Take your cue from the interviewer as to what to order, or ask for suggestions. Do not order the most or least expensive item on the menu.
- Take small bites and you will find it is easier to answer questions or join in table talk; and always chew with your mouth closed.
- Do not smoke.
- Do not complain about the food, service, or restaurant.
- Avoid controversial topics, gossip, or inappropriate jokes.

Graduate School

Exploring Graduate Programs
During your career development and job search phases, you may find yourself considering an advanced degree program in order to achieve your long-term career goals. You may also consider obtaining a graduate degree in order to be more competitive in the job market. Here are some tips to help you along the way.

Explore all of your options before choosing your graduate program. The program you choose should lead you to the job you want to do. Make sure the program you choose will give you the background and skills that you will need to be successful in your chosen career.

You want to choose a program that is the right fit. You will be investing years of your passion and efforts, making it important to think carefully about your next steps. Does the program have faculty with whom you can work? What are recent graduates from the program doing? What reputation do the faculty and program have among their peers? How much does the program cost? Are fellowships, scholarships, or loans available? Where is the program located, which can be relevant to personal or family considerations?

Once you zero in on the specific area of study you are interested in, you can start researching available programs using the following resources:

gradschools.com | petersons.com | allaboutgradschool.com

Faculty members are also a great resource. Ask your professors, advisors, and other members of your academic major department what programs they recommend.

What Are Graduate Schools Looking For?
Each school has its own criteria when reviewing applications, but generally speaking, graduate admissions professionals are looking at GPA, test scores, and professional or research experience in your field. In addition, you will probably be asked to submit letters of recommendation.

The first thing your graduate program is going to do is look at your grades. How did you do in your college courses? It is assumed that your grades reflect your ability to learn, and since graduate school coursework is considered more difficult than undergraduate coursework, admissions counselors are looking at your previous academic record as an indicator of your potential success in graduate school.

What does this mean for you now? Attend your lectures. Do your homework. Take advantage of your professors’ office hours if you are struggling with a class. Do not miss any opportunity that you have to increase your knowledge base.

Making the decision to apply to graduate school is huge. With this decision, you are declaring that there is an area of interest that you want to pursue in depth and that you are willing to sacrifice your time and financial resources to become more knowledgeable in this area.

The faculty and administrators making admissions decisions are looking for students who have a practical knowledge of their chosen area of study. They want to know that you are really interested in the field, not just choosing a program because you cannot find a job or are not ready to enter the workforce. Get involved in any campus activity, club, or professional organization that will give you hands-on experience. Seek out internship opportunities that will give you career-related experience.

Many graduate programs are research-oriented. For those kinds of programs, you will be working closely with a faculty mentor, and both you and a mentor will want to ensure your interests and expertise are aligned.

Below is a list of the common standardized tests you may have to take to apply for a graduate program. You will want to check with each program specifically to find out for sure.

The Application Process
There are some general procedures that most graduate schools follow when it comes to the application process, but you need to keep in mind that each school has the right to set up its procedures in the way that works best for their school. It is important not to assume that all application processes are the same.

There is usually a nonrefundable application fee. The amount varies from university to university and at some institutions may be waived under certain circumstances. Check with the school to inquire about fee waivers.

Applicants with non-U.S. college work may have to pay an additional fee to cover the cost of evaluating their educational credentials.
An application file usually consists of the following:

- The application form and application fee (if required)
- A Statement of Purpose (also known as a Statement of Intent or a Statement of Reason)
- Official transcript of your academic work (this will need to be sent directly from UNLV, in addition to any other college or university attended, to the school you are applying to)
- Courses in progress or projected coursework if you are working on a degree at the time of your application
- Samples of written work, research, or a portfolio of work (commonly required for art, architecture, and creative writing programs)
- Letters of recommendation
- Test scores from standardized tests such as the GRE, GMAT, LSAT, MCAT

Read your application carefully to determine exactly what is required for each application you are submitting.

- Give your essay direction with a theme or a thesis. This is the main point you want to communicate.
- Before you begin writing, organize your thoughts. What do you want to write about?
- What interests you? Where do your passions lie?
- What type of order can you put to your thoughts? What concrete examples from life experiences do you have to support your theme?
- Start your essay with a statement that will capture the attention of your reader. It can be an anecdote, quote, question, or description.
- End your essay with a conclusion that refers back to the beginning and restates your theme.
- Proofread, proofread, and then proofread again. Have the Writing Center (CDC Building 3) look at your document. Ask a professor, friend, or family member to critique it. Be open to suggestions that will make your essay better. Keep an open mind.
- Do not try to impress your audience with your vocabulary, and do not rely exclusively on spell check to catch all spelling errors. You may have spelled your word correctly but misused it in a sentence.
- Make sure your essay is a reflection of who you are. Do not make things up in order to appear to be someone you are not.
- For research-oriented graduate programs, state how your interests and background are a good fit with particular faculty and the overall program. You want to show possible faculty mentors why they should want to work with you for the duration of your graduate program.

Make sure your application is accurate, thorough, easy to read, and your essay is on point, relevant, and positions you in the best possible light. If ever there was a time to pay attention to grammar, punctuation, and spelling, this is it.
Preparation for Graduate School Checklist

- Research schools online and browse through their graduate program and admission requirements
- Schedule campus tours
- Request catalogs and application materials from potential schools
- Decide which programs you are interested in applying to and make a list of admissions requirements
- Mark down application deadlines
- Register for standardized tests
- Prepare for testing via test prep/practice test books

- Take standardized tests
- Draft your personal essay or purpose statement
- Research financial aid options: scholarships, graduate assistantships, fellowships, contact school’s financial aid office, etc.
- Request letters of recommendation from faculty members

- Have your personal essay or purpose statement proofread
- Finalize your personal essay or purpose statement
- Apply for financial aid, graduate assistantships, fellowships, etc.

- Complete your FAFSA
- Request an official transcript (with final semester grades) from the Office of the Registrar of each school you are applying to
- Submit official transcripts to each school
- Make a pros and cons list if accepted to more than one school
- Return acceptance materials to the school you will be attending
- Notify the schools you decided not to attend of your decision
