INFORMATION TO USERS

This manuscript has been reproduced from the microfilm master. UMI films the text directly from the original or copy submitted. Thus, some thesis and dissertation copies are in typewriter face, while others may be from any type of computer printer.

The quality of this reproduction is dependent upon the quality of the copy submitted. Broken or indistinct print, colored or poor quality illustrations and photographs, print bleedthrough, substandard margins, and improper alignment can adversely affect reproduction.

In the unlikely event that the author did not send UMI a complete manuscript and there are missing pages, these will be noted. Also, if unauthorized copyright material had to be removed, a note will indicate the deletion.

Oversize materials (e.g., maps, drawings, charts) are reproduced by sectioning the original, beginning at the upper left-hand corner and continuing from left to right in equal sections with small overlaps. Each original is also photographed in one exposure and is included in reduced form at the back of the book.

Photographs included in the original manuscript have been reproduced xerographically in this copy. Higher quality 6" x 9" black and white photographic prints are available for any photographs or illustrations appearing in this copy for an additional charge. Contact UMI directly to order.

UMI

University Microfilms International
A Bell & Howell Information Company
300 North Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor, MI 48106-1346 USA
313/761-4700  800/521-0080
The Severed Son and other poems. [Original writing]

Andersen, Angela Sue Witzke, M.A.
University of Nevada, Las Vegas, 1990

Copyright ©1990 by Andersen, Angela Sue Witzke. All rights reserved.
THE SEVERED SON
AND OTHER POEMS

By
Angela W. Andersen

A thesis submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of English in Creative Writing

English Department
University of Nevada, Las Vegas
December, 1990
The thesis of Angela W. Andersen for the degree of Master of Arts in English is approved.

Chairperson, A. Wilber Stevens

Examiner Committee Member

Examiner Committee Member

Graduate Faculty Representative

Graduate Dean

University of Nevada
Las Vegas, Nevada
August, 1990
To You, the Reader:

This poetry speaks of people in and of their many dimensions. I don't set out with any one purpose when I write -- that would smother the poem -- but if there is one thing I am seeking, it is honest portrayal, the truth of the feeling.

As far as the creative process is concerned, I let the poem come, with all its sounds, plays on words, multiple meanings. I let it form into its own mode and tone, and then I look at it, listen to it. Sometimes a poem requires little revision, sometimes it requires much revision, but in the process, I attempt to allow the poem to become its own voice, its own truth. Perhaps you will feel it, and that will be its purpose.

[Signature]
Viola

She is a young woman beneath her stone
Walking the fields unknown
And I am left alone.

Her house is rose
The house where I was
The house where she was

Where she held me, in a fragrance
Where she cloistered me
With the sweet smells of all her passion Riding in

She called to me,
"My little darling"
"My little angel with tainted wings"
"Come in! Come in!"
"If your nose is clean, come in!"

Her house is full
Even the roots of the grass
Are there, and I am here
Across the road
Wandering
In her gentle
House.
Basement

It is a dark basement
The lines are grey
Where the water was Where it floods
Like afterbirth.

The dark smell of foul water
Holds the heavy posts Rotting.

The people above
Have planted their flowers
Have planted their signs
To sell

But behind the house
The basement stairs
Are left before the basement door
Deep and open
Where the air is wet
Where there are loose bodies floating
Floating Floating
Without the bulging water
To carry them
Joseph,

You are the spackled wall
An infant slides against the cold
His bald mind
His stumbled body
Pinches you:
He breathes you in Beneath his teeth
Beneath his orange pulp feet
He heals you
On a kind and quilted mattress.
Divorcing

It was this kind of shag rug
Where she scarred
Hard sex
Against
Her back

Now she is bare
With her son
Who doesn't ride
The bus.

He said (over the phone)
"We're just no good
Together.
I'm tired
Of being Castrated."
Fathers and Sons

He says there's a sort of reverence that follows each time he kills
A sort of gratitude for the meat he skins
And doesn't eat.

This time he says his oldest son will follow him four days up the hill
His second son, tugs, Pappa, please don't kill.

He says the others take in archery, black powder, and the faun
The meat's the best, the tenderest
They always get their faun.

Last year he shot his deer
Tied it to the rail
It dried and Dallin cried
And stabbed it
'Till it fell.
Robert who is Retarded

Gracious hands rope together from all sides
He hides
He haunts in battle in his own
Young voice
His eyes are trenches faded
In them he is Deepening his own dark
Smile
Barefoot
And impregnable:
His own dull thought
He laughs
And destroys.
The Wailing Wall

In the Wailing Wall
The mind is thick
With knot and sweat
The gallows of the past
In presence
Without them hearing
Soldiers guarding
Crumpled Jews
In deep and hollow
Holes
It's coming, you know

The wide throat of death
As tight as Iraq
Heaving and breathing
Failing dust, opera
And you, my son, there
In khaki cloth where willows
Haven't fallen, where Hemlock
Is your name, open, in afferent pulses
In white
Weather
The Dance of Marriage

The dance of marriage dead and long
The dance of slow and buried song
Dying in a garden rot
The tiny grains the twain forgot
Tiny children wedged between
In tight and twisted sheathes of green
Tender plants the heat doth rip
Their old man in his prime:
A drip.
The Family Picture

In the family picture you are not smiling
All the others peachy keen
You are left staring
Like your grandmother would have done
Like her grandmother would have done
Like a homeless poster face
Your look is swollen in despair
Every why by which the family stands
"Loyalty, status, stability"
Is silenced
In your vacant
Face.
A Cricket Pair

On the blue window sill
In the blue
A baby is born
Again
The life force gives Nervously blue
And blue most surely Will die
Unknown
The giver gives
In hollow
Retreat
What Mothers Say to their Daughters

She said to me, "When they're young they break their toys and When they're old they break your heart"
She said it to me one year
In her alcoholism
And her coarse laughter
And I laughed
After her.
I guess I could have said it
(Or something similar)
But instead I
Held it for this moment
When I would see a rose ribbon frayed
And a jump rope without ends
Tied and blowing
Against a bent down
Rabbit cage
Fence.
The World is Harsh

I once had a wish
Where there are lakes and rains and trailers
In the woods (in Washington)

The desert here is odd in wind
My brother hides
His marks
He walks on heroin
His feet are skin

The widow next to all of us
Wheels her garbage out
The world instead
Wishes to be dead
Where there are rows and rows of connoisseurs Professors of the woods
The Poet

I'm hating him -- that old, damned poet with the greased laugh and teeth
And dirty breath
Feasting in his scurvy shorts:
Green-yellow against his gut bulging

Oh, he is crude, isn't he?

His own flesh flabbing with his right leg crossed Cigarette and hairy
In green-yellow froth

When he talks his scratched and testamental voice
Vomits into me four-walled and hideous

And the cross-legged stinking toad
Is comfortable
In his stench.
Vanity

I was thinking about him
With the red shorts
And the thongs
And the Muselix cereal with his two glass bottles of juice in his little blue shopping Basket
I had forgotten about them (those kind of baskets and my children with me)
While I watched the gym fit man in the gaberdine shorts
Walk to his Mercedes that was black
And my son in back of me
Darting forward
Somewhere I saw ahead of him darting and called him
Just before the car with a couple jetting forward slammed its breaks
And nearly hit him
So my son
I hit him.
Adam Hears

A speckled hole -- a vent above my head
Where the air blows
Where the hot wind blows the dead

I hear them, they are coming -- living old and red
Their flagrance shows
Where the hot wind blows the dead

Already there is innocence
His branches bare
Her double head

Already there are apparations
Where the hot wind blows the dead.
The Woman in Grey: A Painting

Shifting in the fields
The woman in grey
In the dull grey
Never moves
She has no face, no hands, no place
Her parasol even
Between the grey and the grasses that never grow
In thin and dull and even grey
My Grandmother Had

My grandmother had long, long toe nails
Long toe nails that stuck out long and low
From her see-through, rhinestone, high heels.
She stepped on my toe once, "Oh
I'm sorry, darling
These big ugly feet of mine
With these long toe Nails"
"Oh
How they hurt," she would say
But she let them grow and curl
Down, around
Weaving
Over the black and calloused body
Of her life.
A Dark Room

Sitting in a dark room
A dark space
My mother is a dark room
A dark space
She and I
Across the board
Across each other
In a dark room
In a dark space
Sitting.
Sitting.
Sylvia Plath
(In Quotations)

ISBN 0-396-45374-7
PS 3566.L27 Z9134 1989
The personal life of Sylvia Plath is opened to the public
Jacked off by a hearty breakfast and pleading
For pills
For literary monologues
Penceling chaotic memories and obsessions
In feverish delirium.
Men she had known in the past
Often flung in --
Then she went to bed:
Reenacted pills, ravings, a short sleep,
The three o'clock awakening, more pleading for pills
For sleep again
And the same hearty breakfast.

* * *

"What a pity. If I could paint, I would want to paint things.
I love the thinginess of things."
Old Men

They had serious voices
Serious enough
(All others believed them)
Now they sit
Laughing
Cock-eyed and Knock-knee-d
SECTION II

Third Cottage Boys
THIRD COTTAGE (Detention)

The poetry in a calloused cage
Is crusted hard by violence and vulnerability
The life in a woman, who is bruised
And brutal
With children, maniacs, all of them
Is gold in angry opposition.

The Christmas carol that enters
The house of beating voices
Is vacant
In opposition.

In this home
The boys are scared
Tasting metal
Buried
Alone.
Juliano

He had a scar that ran down the center of his chest
Wide and thick
His hair was dark, knotted
And he lied

He styled his friends around him
All of them following
To world domination

I saw him scribble Satanic symbols on his shoe
I saw into him
He said, "Oh, it's really a joke"

After they knew he couldn't read
He was caged
Kevin

When he went back in
I saw him behind the stainless
Steel cafeteria counter
In Zenoff Hall:
He was crying,
"I don't have anywhere else
To go"
His grandparents
Grow lovely roses
In arches
On Edna Street
Heath

Heath called me
After I stopped coming
To Third Cottage, "I Bought a new car but
It was towed away because It wasn't insured or Registered and
I'm going to be getting that Very soon. Could
You loan me fifty dollars? I'm Calling from the phone at school; My Mother and I got in a big Fight last night and She's bitchin'
Again."
Phillip

He wore
A pressed
Flat
Top
A hat
Flat
Brown
Yellow brown
Glasses
Round
He was
A thumb screw
Thief
Of cars
He was Intelligent
And God.
I was surprised
That he Was there
Joey

Joey always followed
With Phillip,
He had the kind of weathered blond hair
Like Shredded Wheat.
He would like that.
He would like being thought of
As wheat
He was
The Staff
Of Life

Joey,
His open shawl
Blew
And crystal found him
And left him
Staggering
Crawling.
Mark

Mark, the elemental star of all
Our successes
His own magician
Gaining him
Perfection:
He would walk across the stage
And copulate
With the best of us
With his spark
Of potential
So we let him slip by Conning us
In every way
Lawrence

He was a soft faggot
Who loved
And let his innocence
Hang him

He held me
And offered me
To let him cry

So I let go
And he went on Waiting in a cage
For his father
James

Black apostle
Dragging in
To each of them
I saw your fists clenched
And your head ragged
Against a carved school Desk. "We are melting Minds," Mark said.
But you didn't Say what you
Were doing
That day.
John

Where is John?
Narrow
He feared the attitude
Of Healing
He was healing

The holes of his eyes were ahhs
Long
Starving sags of tissue
Beneath them
He was in them

Now he has brought us all
To Spring Mountain
Where we do not see him
Where we wade before his bottled eyes
Where he is swelling
Tony Sedgwick

Tony,
You are these boys
Aching
For sanity's home
They are in your acne scars
Your eyes, your Courtesy

The viper they see
Is your reversal
Backing into Each of them
SECTION III

Lighter Poetry
She announces to me, "I'm a vegetarian,"
And buys 750 pounds of dry Beans: kidney, Great Northern, Small red and white and I
Buy
Breakfast sausage
With the orange grease.

Then she says, "I swear,
That smell is going to make me throw up"
She rinses her beans
I make my pizza
She makes her pasta out of fresh
Duck eggs.

She sits neatly across the table,
Me
The kids
The dog on the floor
With the sausage
She
With her duck pasta
And her beans
Boiling
Roman Numerals

I hate Roman Numerals

I suppose they look spiffy in a preface or a title -- all lined up

Bold, angled, loud, proud and fat:

M M D C C L X I I I

But I hate them staring back at me

Not knowing what in duck soup they're saying

Much past thirty.
The Fly and I

It bothers us
To have something
So intimate
As a fly
ON us
Perhaps
It's the way
The fly
Loooks
And rubs
His greedy little Tongs
Together

We sit sitting on the toilet
Hoping that none of us isn't leaking
In such a way that such a fly
Could find a way to slip into
The thick of it BUT worst of all
Not to find his way back out
Again and once again so intimately
Place his pompous little laquered
Self
ON us.
The Wiener Burglar
(For the Deconstructionist)

The Wiener Burglar came to my house last night
He sneaked through the door
And turned out the light
He opened the frig
And to his surprise
There were no wiener
Only fries
He said to himself
There must be some wiener here
So he marched up the stairs
And into my fear
But I shut my eyes tight
And hid from his sight
And he found no wiener in my house that night
So when he was gone
From under my bed
I pulled out six wiener that would have been dead
A whole package of wiener
I had hid them away
I was saving them for A rainy day
Since my fear was all gone
And the Burglar was too
I ate five of those weener
And saved one for you.
Dog

NO!

You long-haired huffing, sneezing, wheezing
Bounding, houvering, hounding
Dragging me out of bed at three a.m.
Whining, whimpering, grunting, groaning, panting
Moaning
You dry-mouthed, black lipped
Saggy, sloppy, flopping
Flea-bitten sack of Flogging to my soul!
SECTION IV

Dreams and the Odd
The quiet child in my room
Never laughs
Never calls
Just the constant constricting of his fingers
The last cry of a crusty fish
On dry ground
His brittle, brittle bones
Still clamouring between us
Battered Woman Therapy

Man cut out woman's heart
And she found it there
Beating
Under desert dust.

Woman went away for awhile
And Man found her
Sneaking in Listening for her own dull heart
So he beat it until it wasn't dead
Any more.

Woman heard it
Guiltily.

Man flew off
And woman was left
With the hole.
Hemingway

The sun is filtered there
Folding and narrowing to the West
Sea
Neither grey nor black
But at best a sound:
Night clouds against a water
An agreeing suffocation
Which is empty.
Fatherhood

Fall corn doesn't crop up gradually
It bursts itself toward the late October sky--
A man's last attempt
At fatherhood.

I've seen the boy cling to his mother
When most boys
Are gambling on BMX's
And baseball cards
He's dizzy against his mother's cupcake arms

His father
Is Heading for
The Frost.
In Front of the Barbary Coast

A shriner without his arm
His white shirt sleeve
Pressed and pinned
Beside him
His old hair blowing
His sun sores soft
His red face
Lost
About a Throat

There's something about a throat been slit
After the blood has run out After it's left there turning in
And empty
Purple.

There's something about it being able to open
That keeps me from looking in.

I dreamed a man whose throat had been slit ear to ear
And when I pulled his finger up to touch it
I felt it
Getting firmer
Turning in.

It's the fear of the head flipped back
And the throat gaped open.

It would be worse
Far worse than a mirror
Up the stairs
Of a girl's
Panties.

The throat of Hell would gape open
And swallow me.
Mental Illness

Here
On a sheet of clay
He carves a rag
A bone
A shank of day

Here
Under sheltered sun
Flat against a sand stone Wall

He waits in quiet medicine
In a hospital of quiet Medicine

Here
In a flat chair
Your own museum
You offer him

He is here with you
Rocking
In your broken
Zoo
Peru, Andres

A plot of trees
He will always be the two-
Bird flying through
A red shadow of seas

He holds the plane
A tiny thumb against A tiny wheel against
A nail, a house of rain

He cannot read, his brown
Eyes see brown
He is alone
In rows of earth and brown
On Ending His Nationality

He peels his skull
His celophane covered skull
Back, he looks Back, he sees me
Watching him
He peels it closed again
And drives his Yellow
Car
SECTION V

Perfect Children
Embryonic Child

Embryonic child
Quiet
Mild
Eyes without lashes
Brows without form
Aureole white
Distant
Light
Bartering with the man among the tombs
Berthing with the others in the wombs
Without distance
Without form
Mild
Quiet
Embryonic child
The I Am

Even the slightest thumb against a paperback cover awakens him
As if returning from some faraway land
Where sound is light
And sight is quieted
Still
Where he, out of infant body, becomes the man again
Walking with the tall ones
Robed
Gloried
Across all generations, galaxies,
And ages past
In the fullness of his times and beings
Every where and every when Where he becomes the man again --

He jolts with outstretched body stiff
Eyes wide and tight and distant
As if returning from some faraway land
Where sound is light
And sight
Is still.
Black Baby

Her skin is torn
Her child is born
Narrow generations sigh
Looking, I
See a black baby without his mother there
Abandoned to his own aggressive care
He is suffering
His old mind, unknowing
Bloody generations bind
He is left to find
Willow Child

Willow Child nears the pool no more
  Surrenders single, narrowly twisted leaves:
  Silken scales brush cold the one who grieves.
Time compels a sharing with the shore

Completed still the willow child is shed
  Flushed in silence, in nervous sighs compressed,
  Agreed, the sheet is placed, the child undressed
Time compels a burial for the dead

Willow child immure and disimmure
  Collecting quiet mournings of the night
  Again the sand pulls closer to his sight
Time unsphered: a willow submerged once more Waking up the sound of fresh fingers touching
A silent baby finds his hands
When no one's watching watching his hands look back at him
The two of them still
In open conversation
Listening to his fingers folding touching
Cradling his skin
His smells of sweet water bread
Saves
Upon his face.
Popsicles

One child stuck to a Popsicle stick
His feet bare
His own brown eyes
Full of squares of marbled light
And the stick
Leading him
Anywhere
To Devan

Held within a softly breathing
Gentle, infant body,
You move away from bumper pads
And jolts of other brothers
Your crib beside the garden window
With late tomatoes and early pumpkin vines
And chimes of other neighbors
Labors all around the house just now
And you in subtle breathing
With lips and eyes half parted
Always with your hand held near Your silent face
Always with your head towards
The light.
A Shallow Spark

This tiny child
Who holds me
Who suckles me
Whose head is mine
Whose hair is whispered
In my fingers

This tiny child
Is older than the sun who Wraps around
My mourning
He hallows me:
A shallow spark
Against a cavity
Of time
This tiny child
Divine
Staying Here

The world will graze away
I will stay here
Watching you:
Nervous body
Infant nails
Scratching at a dream
Uneven breaths
Red and glittered veins
Against your lids--
Your mind is a fruit bowl
So you will let me stay here
(There is nothing more than this.)
Joshua

There was an old child born
His parents young, without reason
Using cocaine in a rainy Portland season
Before the old child born

He was shaking when she changed him
His mother shaking when she was gone
Stripping in rooms until dawn
While he lay shaking his grandmother changed him.

She held him two days before the funeral
She kissed him, kissed him
Sang and sang, and never once wept

The child's face was brilliant and full
His fingers lifted around him
He died and died, and never once slept
I remember this:
this feeling that transfigures woman back into herself again
I remember this hazy child wrapped and folded fresh in my arms
I remember this stop along the giddy pass of day
I remember pausing here feeling I had found the only space in all of time that would never change
Like a fox circled, sleeping in a worn and polished berth
I remember this child
Uncircumcised and unmoved Asleep within My earth.
SECTION VI
THE SEVERED SON
THE SEVERED SON

An Introduction:

The Severed Son is set in Africa, about 1910. The principal character, Zomu, is a native African who has worked in the Kimberly Gold Mine and lived in a nearby compound with his wife and two sons. The effects of both working and living in severely depressed conditions remain with Zomu, as he frequently relives past events. The dramatic narrative borrows from history actual names of cities and the mine mentioned in the piece. The rest is fictional.

At one level, The Severed Son is a story of man's isolation in a violent and vulnerable world, hence, the story could be of anyone in any era. It is a journey of the mind, echoing sound and thought, transgenerational, and appearing chaotic, but ordered, once understood. Thus, we see Zomu hearing the African cries and persuadings of ancestors and present associates, with no respect to time or place.

Reaching Bloemfontein for Zomu is like reaching Byzantium for Yeats — at one level he arrives — we always do, whether or not we are conscious of it.
THE SEVERED SON

by Angela Andersen

Zomu

Had an eye full of glass.
He built a fire to burn
The living cow, dead.
He held her, teeth clenched, up
And slit her, ear to ear.
The bloated, glutted, gutted
Cow, the paradisiacal glory
Of Zimbabwe, burned like an altar
Inside out, bursting
Full of greed and malice,
Diseased, "Bleed the poison
Out," he whispered. His brain
Was crazed, washed, salted
Fresh full of death.
He listened to the voices touching him,
Coaxing him, "Go, go,"
"Here, here, here"
"There!" -- an arm around him,
Pointing him, "Here, here!"
Zomu crouched near the seething
Cow; it was good to watch
Death flatten in the dry
Sand; it was good to watch
Drips of rain steam
On the cow's hot, leathered
Flesh; it was good to burn.
There was nothing left, then.
The muscle had consumed every moisture,
Leaving her dry.

The hot coals pulled her skin
Under her skin. She sucked
At the earth and it left her brittle.
"Ooooooooyee, ooooyee, ooooyee"
Deep in his throat he knew it
"Oooooooohyee, oooooooh, eye eeuuuuuu"
He burned the cow's incense
"Ahhhhhhh, Ishe Komborera, Africa"
He burned the cow's mind--
A mind that never moves
When it burns in an act of worship.
"Aheyeeeeee, yaaaaaanaa, eeeeeeccccceee"
"Eeeeeeccccccceee"
Zomu burned her. It left him.
Brutal against his own colic mind.

He spit upon the cow's remains.
All the death, burial, and resurrection
Of the day could not save him.
He knew when he returned from Durban
He would wait until nightfall and go
To the Big Hole again.
He knew he would lead others to the mine
And stop the transport of gold.
He knew he would kill again.
Zomu walked through the night,
Through the next day.
He reached the lord's house.
He walked to the back where the white lord
Was waiting, leaning against a post
Looking to the east shore.

The lord imagined heavy
Rain, with busses with the people
Of Great Britain passing by.
He imagined the gutters of London
Filled, running over with water
And debris.
He imagined stepping there, watching
Water swell, pass,
In and around his shoe.
But it was dry here. The tiny
Rain was gone. The sun
Was on him, like a clawing, wreeathing Thing. His face had become Lined and stark, and narrow.
He was in Africa.

"Where is the cattle?" asked the lord.
"There was only one cow on the ship."
"It was bloated," Zomu said.
"You killed it, then?"
"Yes." Zomu waited
For his response. The white lord Looked out for a moment, turned
And walked into the house.
No one was in Zomu's home
When he arrived. His boys
Were at the river. His cot
Was dark.
"Who is with me tonight? One. Two."
"Three, four. . . Five."
"Five of us."
He took his knife and made
Five marks on the cot's wooden Frame. For eleven years
He had marked the wooden frame.
He had been in the DeBeer's compound.
He had mined the Big Hole: Every day
He had breathed, a mile deep, the heating Diseased dust. Now he had his own land
And his boys.
Zomu stood and looked Through the uneven slit of the shutters.
His boys were coming now.
A nerve between his shoulders was pinched.

Zomu saw a baby in his mind there
As he was wrapping his knife in a cloth
As he was putting it deep in his green bag
As he was getting ready.
Kamau pushed the door open fast
Zomu saw the baby again
He heard him lying there,
"Ahhhhhhhye ahhhhhh gaaaaaahhh"
Every time Zomu would return to the compound
He saw the baby.
He saw his wife holding the baby
Scared and hating Zomu
Every time he came back
From the Big Hole.
Zomu heard the baby again.

He heard Kamau again,
"Uuuuuuuhhh ehhhehh ann uhhhh ahhhh"
His wife was holding the hole on Kamau's head
With a white handkerchief.
Kamau had a hole -- two holes
She didn't see the other, it bled
Against the shirt on her arm.
She knew it
When they lifted the baby
From her arm.
She was there;
Zomu was there
When they took Kamau to the room
With one table.
And one doctor.

They let him lie there while they waited
And thought of what to do.
The side of Kamau's head was swelling.
His forehead had a hole, not bleeding
But open, full of flesh and little rocks
And the smell of his head.
The piece of glass was lodged
Inside. The doctor
Took a cup,
Poured the water in Rinsing, cleaning the hole.
His fingers could go deep between Kamau's skin and his blue
Skull. He rinsed the hole
Again, letting the water drain out.

Then he said, "There's a piece of glass here."
He pulled it forward with his gloved
Left hand. It was small enough to fit
Between his fingers. He looked at it
And at Kamau's mother.
"This may get infected. I don't know
If I can get it clean," he said.
But the hole was clean.
He stitched it; then he rinsed and stitched
The second hole, tight.
Kamau's head was still swelling. "Aahhhhhhh eh uuuuhhh"
The baby was looking and his head
Was dull. Kamau's mother was looking at Zomu.
She hated the compound more
And the black scar after.

X            X            X

Then Zomu remembered.
"Are you ready, Kamau?" he asked.
"Yes. Mobera is ready, too."

It was eleven thirty.

Zomu and his two sons went to the river

To meet the others

To stop the transport

Of gold.
Early morning, Zomu
Was warm, somewhere in the bush.
His left leg was throbbing. He had A cut on the instep of his foot.
He rubbed his hand down near
His foot; his veins were warm.
He could feel them near the surface now.
He heard a small bird, only one, sounding twisted
And tight in short cries.
Then he heard a loud sound,
A fiery sound, coming from Bloemfontein.
Zomu tried to lift himself --
He pushed his hands against the ground
He could feel the blow he received
Hard on his left side.

His arm could barely lift him.
The small bird was almost quiet now.
He heard him, very faint, in short
Pulses. Zomu stood. The ache was less.
He wondered if his sons were dead.
He wondered if the two other men
That were with him were dead.
Zomu heard the fire again.
Now he thought to head east, toward Bloemfontein. He lifted his left leg.

His blood came down hard with his heel.
The pain cut up and into His calf. But he continued to walk.
He knew the heavy dragging sound
Leading him to the city.

Below the fire he could always Hear the dragging.
"The temple veil was rent in twain."

He thought of the first time he heard of it
In the compound. Zomu breathed deep.
He could feel his blood come down hard
To his heel. Every time he took A step the pain spread flat
Inside his leg; he pulled His stiff leg forward; then the blood
Pulsed another time.

The veil was in his mind now. It haunted him
When he first saw it, but then he heard it,
And that is what was planted in him
Over and over.

"Oooohheee ahhh ehhhehh eeuu"
"Ahhhhhhh ehhhehh euuuuuu euuuuuuu. . ."n

The veil was a chorus of dissonant
Cries, clawing at the sound of heaven,
A rising, twisted, steady sound
Of voices heaving, dragging Against a dark and gravid sky.
"Ahhhhhheee Ahhhhhheee Ehhh"
"Eeeehha Eeeehhhhhhaaa"
Zomu's mind was the vortex
Of the dissonance, through him it would cross,
Bursting in all directions;
He felt it there steady when he walked
With his blood coming down hard with his foot.
Zomu walked for nearly eight hours.

The sun was behind him, on him,
Burning against his naked back.
His foot dragged and brought
The smell of dust to his face.
He remembered the mine even more.
He could not see in any direction,
Only the mark of the pick as it struck
Against the rock, hard, and pounding
In him. His legs were strong.
His arms were tight against the handle
Of the pick; his hands were clenched.
And the pain was sharp, as if the mark
Of the pick was driven in them.
He was thirsty now. Soon the sun
Would be down and he would still be thirsty.
He knew he was two days from Bloemfontein.
A great system of sound flooded him.
First, a single drop, flat
Against a hard surface, then,
All at once, a surge of sound,
As if his veins were filled with heavy water.
He rested now, with his veins filled;
He fell asleep, dreaming of the sound
And of his wife, whom he could not love.
It was still dark when Zomu awoke --
He heard the sound flood his mind --
Again. Before he knew that the sound
Was coming in, he was urinating on the dusty
Soil. He could barely see his urine,
Dark against the early morning ground.

The tight earth held the urine
Like a pool. Zomu cupped his hands,
He brought the urine to his lips,
He drank quickly; his mouth,
Tongue, and throat were warm
All at once together.
"I am not here; I am here," he said.
"I am somewhere else. Not here."
Zomu listened to himself
Think the thoughts of a man
Who winds down into himself.
He stood and saw that his foot
Had swollen to a thick, dull weight.
The pain was on him once again.
The sun was on him once again.

His mind led him to the bottom
Of the Big Hole where the air
Was heavy and old. Each time
He tried to crawl enough
The rock and sand would hold him.
"God, help me," he whispered.
Zomu dragged his leg.
In an iron crawl his weight
Was dead against the ground.
He began to notice the sound
Of wind all around him.
He heard the sound of a baby
Crying, laughing, he was not Sure. The wind grew louder
He cried with it, "Ahhhhhhhh"

"Ahhhhhhhh ahhhhhh eh eh eh eh ahhhh ahhhh uhhh"
"Ahhhhhhhh ahhhhhh ahhhhhhhh h h h h"
He was breathing in dust, coughing
All the dull breaths of death;
His knees were heavy on the soil.
The pain in his leg was tight
And long, "Ahhhhhhhhhhhhhh ahhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh"
"Ahhhh Ahhhhhhhhhhhh Ahhhhhhhhhh A hhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh"
He couldn't hold the sound any longer.
He cried louder: the louder
He cried, the louder the wind
Sounded around him, winding
In him, down, open
And down. His head was pounding
Like an old man's fist was pounding
In it. Pounding. Pounding.

Then he heard a quiet. Louder
Than the pounding, he heard
A quiet growing, as if nothing
Was in him but the sound of quiet
Growing. It was a single strand --
Firm against his leavened mind.
He let it rest there.
He let the strand of quiet
Hold him steady. He knew that he Could stand. Zomu
Gathered his death around him
Severed,
He felt the air.