The Ancient Roman World
The Lure of the Dicing Table

• Roman Youth:
  – deemed to be esp. susceptible
  – concern for protecting family assets, reputation (of elites)
  – fear of “syndrome of vice” (dicing, drinking, illicit sex)

• Senatorial Elites:
  – Excessive, habitual or inappropriate gambling seen as road to ruin

• The Poor:
  – initially viewed as part of the problem, not victims
    • lumped in w/criminal element (& presumed guilty)
  – awareness, concern for poor increased in Christian period
Roman Gamblers

• Caligula (Suetonius Gaius 41.3)
• Claudius (Suetonius Claudius 33)
• Commodus (HA Commodus 3)
• Licinius Lenticula (Cicero Philippics 2.23.56)
• Roman “Gamblers Anonymous”:
  – “Young Wastrels”: (Horace Hor. Odes 3.24.58 ; cf. Seneca De Vita Beata 7)
  – “Betting the Coffers”: (Juvenal Satires 1.88-93)
  – “The Idle Poor”: (Ammianus Marcellinus 6.25)
Understanding of Pathological Gambling: Then & Now

Early Christian Tract*:
- Deceptive speech
- Wild impatience
- Fraternal discord
- Mindless raving/quarrelsome displays
- Continuous gambling (“day and night”)
- Risks large amounts/entire family fortune
- Does not cease after losses/desire to increase wealth
- Shameful crime/false witness

DSM IV Definition:
- Lying to others
- preoccupied w/gambling
- Restless, irritable when not gambling
- Jeopardizing important relationships
- Risks increasing amounts of money
- “chasing losses” leads to further gambling
- resorts to forgery, fraud, etc.
Points of Comparison: the Ancient Romans on Alcoholism

• Seneca on habitual alcohol consumption (1st C CE)
  – Distinction: ebrius vs. ebriosus *
  – description of long-term effects of habitual drinking
    • Loss of neuromuscular coordination (tripping, stumbling, etc.):
    • Pallor
    • Trembling hands
    • Weight loss (thinness)
      – attributed to inability to digest
    • Abdominal bloating
    • Sluggishness/stupefaction
  – Pliny the Elder on effects of habitual drinking (1st C CE)
    • Sores/inflammation in eyes
    • Pallor
    • Trembling hands
    • Insomnia
    • Excitability/aggression
    • Shortened lifespan

• NIAAA Brochure:
  – Hepatic encephalopathy
    • loss of neuromuscular coordination
      – Shaking or flapping of hands
    • Anxiety
    • Mood/personality changes
    • Coma
  – Conjunctival Injection (eyelids)
  – Gastritis
    • abdominal bloat)
  – Pancreatitis
    • digestive dysfunction
    • sweating,
    • pain
  – Weakened immune system
  – Cancer Risks
Roman Criminal Statutes on Gaming

- General prohibition on gambling, 3\textsuperscript{rd} C BCE
  - \textit{Lex Talaria} (or \textit{lex Alearia})
    - known only from references in literary sources
    - Little is known of content of prohibition, sanctions
      - evidence suggests a fine on gamblers of 4x amount wagered
      - gambling under general jurisdiction of aediles (city officials)
      - In practice, state enforcement at best sporadic & selective
  - Law of early 1\textsuperscript{st} C BCE created exception to prohibition:
    - for betting on “contests of strength” (running, javelin-throwing, etc.)
    - potentially opened the door to sports-betting (on chariot races, gladiatorial games, etc.)
      » Likely, however, that sports betting of that type had always gone in Rome on without any state interference
      » Considered strictly private matter between friends
Adolescent Gambling in Ancient Rome

• Adolescent males thought especially susceptible to lure of gambling by Romans:
  – challenge of defining “youth gambling” in Rome
    • adulescens & iuvenis used very loosely by Romans
    • Adolescent males: under age and in potestate
      – Actual age range: appr. 13-18
      – typically had discretionary funds (peculium) from pater familias
  – Evidence from literary sources suggests adolescent males engaged mainly in dice games, not sports betting
    • NB: literary & legal sources take little note of “sports betting”
    • some varieties of dice games involved high levels of skill
    • Very little evidence in sources with respect to gambling by women or girls
Roman Vices: Gambling, Drinking and Prostitution as a Trap for the Unwary
Legal Response to Youth Gambling

• General criminal law prohibition (3rd C BCE)
• Civil Liability/Rights of Action (Just. Dig. 11.5):
  – in favor of youth’s pater familias for his losses
  – against youth’s pater familias for his winnings
  – against party deemed responsible for “corrupting” a youth by inducing him to gamble:
    • for “insult” (iniuria), a type of tort (delict)
    • in favor of his pater familias
Justinian’s Anti-Gambling Edicts

• Stated Policy Objective: to protect people from their own folly, playing dice “day and night,” then losing substantial sums, leading ultimately to “blasphemy” as they executed promissory notes.

• Content of Law: playing dice in public or private for real stakes or not, declared illegal, but not subject to penalty; losses on permitted types of “sports betting” limited to one gold piece (equivalent of $ ).

• Effect: to prevent chief evils (loss of wealth & “blasphemy”) associated with gambling by limiting the potential financial losses.
  – Recovery of gambling losses made actionable for gamblers and their heirs;
  – earlier practice (however sporadic) of imposing fourfold fine on gamblers officially abandoned.

• Sanctions for owners/operators of establishments w/gambling

• Special penalties for clergy dicing or watching dice games.
