till

Jonathan Peter Moore

University of Nevada, Las Vegas
TILL

by

Jonathan Peter Moore

Bachelor of Arts
Rhodes College
2003

A thesis submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the

Master of Fine Arts in Creative Writing Department of English
College of Liberal Arts

Graduate College
University of Nevada, Las Vegas
August 2009
The Thesis prepared by Jonathan Peter Moore

Entitled

is approved in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Fine Arts in Creative Writing

Examination Committee Chair

Dean of the Graduate College

Examination Committee Member

Examination Committee Member

Graduate College Faculty Representative ABSTRACT

till

by

Jonathan Peter Moore

Dr. Donald Revell, Examination Committee Chair
Professor of English
University of Nevada, Las Vegas

till is a collection of poetry exclusively composed while the poet was a graduate student in the Creative Writing International Master of Fine Arts program at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. The manuscript includes ekphrastic reflections on William Eggleston’s Guide and confronts regionalism, religion and past/present subjectivity.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

ABSTRACT .................................................................................................................. iii

PREFACE .................................................................................................................... vi

NOTES ....................................................................................................................... xii

W.E. Guide Morton, Mississippi ............................................................................. 1

W.E. Guide Whitehaven, Mississippi .................................................................... 2

Consider the Ravens

I. Clear Thoughts ....................................................................................................... 3

II. Carry into the machine the voice of being caught ............................................. 4

III. Here I Raise Mine Ebenezer ............................................................................... 5

IV. Priest Dam Project Changed Lives of Many ....................................................... 6

Whatever Tickles your Fiscal ....................................................................................... 8

W.E. Guide Tallahatchie County ............................................................................. 9

Leave Me ..................................................................................................................... 10

Trailer for ................................................................................................................... 11

W.E. Guide Near Morton, Mississippi .................................................................. 12

A Dime that Doesn’t .................................................................................................... 13

The Cuss of Place ....................................................................................................... 14

Long Live the Kane .................................................................................................. 15

Cot Damn ................................................................................................................... 16

Till Human Voices Wake Us ....................................................................................... 17

Labor Ready .............................................................................................................. 18

W.E. Guide Crenshaw, Mississippi ....................................................................... 19

Pyrrhic ....................................................................................................................... 20

Sew & Sew ................................................................................................................ 21

Performance ............................................................................................................. 22

Covenant and Loving It ............................................................................................. 24

Let ‘er Rip ................................................................................................................... 25

Bystander .................................................................................................................. 26

Chanticleer ............................................................................................................... 27

Lasting Impression ................................................................................................... 28

W.E. Guide Memphis ............................................................................................ 29

Poem ......................................................................................................................... 30

Steeple People ......................................................................................................... 31

As Rich as Croesus ................................................................................................... 33

Snapper Jessissippi ................................................................................................... 34

Aux Animaux Domestiques ..................................................................................... 35
Propinquity .......................................................... 36
W.E. Guide Tallahatchie County .................................. 37
W.E. Guide Tallahatchie County .................................. 38
Skin/Within ......................................................... 39
Heathen .......................................................... 41
Percy Priest ......................................................... 42
Young Avenue Napkin ............................................. 43
Arise, Shine ....................................................... 44
Crazy Eights ......................................................... 45
W.E. Guide Huntsville, Alabama ............................... 46
Skill & Live ........................................................ 47
W.E. Guide Black Bayou Plantation, near Glendora ......... 48
W.E. Guide Tallahatchie County ............................... 49
W.E. Guide Gulfport, Mississippi ............................ 50

VITA ..................................................................... 51
PREFACE

Socrates: You know, Phaedrus, writing shares a strange feature with painting. The offsprings of paintings stand there as if they are alive, but if anyone asks them anything, they remain most solemnly silent. The same is true of written words. You'd think they were speaking as if they had some understanding, but if you question anything that has been said because you want to learn more, it continues to signify just that very same thing forever.

--Plato

These poems initially arose out of a passage in John Szarkowski's introductory essay for William Eggleston's first collection of photographs, out of the concentration that broke, as I read his prose. Szarkowski begins his opening remarks with the phrase, "AT THIS WRITING," and in the heralding expression, the former curator of New York's Museum of Modern Art forgoes hierarchies and vain attempts at immutable precision, privileging a subjective, immediate and particular mode of ekphrastic engagement (5). I was at the time trying to reflect on one of the well-known lines from William Carlos Williams' poem "To Elsie" in which he describes America's "devil-may-care men" and "young slatterns" as possessing "imagination which have no / peasant traditions to give them / character" (217). I began to read Williams' condemnation of industrialized provincial life into my own connections with the American South, and his influence spurred me to investigate the parts behind the parts of "I was raised in these parts." I saw this investigation taken up and taken further by Ross McElwee in his film Sherman’s March, Thomas Sutpen in William Faulkner’s Absalom, Absalom and most serviceably in William Eggleston’s Guide. One night in the basement of my parents’ home, I discovered my response to “To Elsie.” Covered in dust and wrapped in a sheath of plastic, the cornice of a dollhouse jutted out from the rubble of a workbench.

For as long as I knew T, he smelled of dirt, an odor you notice all the more in the city, where he resided for the second half of his life. Bartering a shotgun home in sharecropping country for an air-conditioned duplex in Nashville’s Berry Hill housing projects, he squirreled away nickels and dimes to buy small patches of land. In these little roadside thickets, he raised tomatoes, greens, squash, okra, carrots, chickens, strawberries and blackberries, all while working full-time at a local grocery distributor. Later in his life when his lungs started to shut down, he wore breathing tubes up his nose for hours at a time. The condition worsened until he was finally forced into the hospital for a tracheotomy. Following the operation, tubes tethered him at all times to his oxygen tank. No longer able to wood work in his shed or tend to his scattered plots of land, T divvied out the tilling of his gardens and the harvesting of his crops amongst neighbors, my father – who still answers to the appellation T’s son – and me.

In the last spring of his life, T refused further imposition and remained indoors. The hospital dispatched door-to-door orderlies to change his trach. and, after a few visits, T asked one of them if he could keep the biohazard bags they filled with the slender tubes and stubby trachs that previously perforated his larynx. My grandmother would sterilize the respiratory byproducts in the pots that were used for cooking. In no time, kids could be seen throughout the projects playing on swings that dangled from tree branches by T’s recycled breathing tubes. As for the trachs, T spent his last days on earth using them as one might popsicle sticks, reassembling a scale version of the childhood home he left behind in sharecropping country. My grandfather, John T Moore, posthumously entered this replica of what he called “The Old Place” into an arts and crafts competition at the Tennessee State Fair, earning the blue ribbon.

Finding this artifact that had drifted into the unconscious clutter of my parents’ basement seemed to be the perfect conversation starter for my dialogue with Williams. But no matter how I tried, I could not break the ice. The burden of rendering justice to the account of a man who resurrects his ancestral home out of the very thing that while keeping him alive signals his own impending death, proved to be too much for me. I could never divorce his story from the vague and overpowering potential I saw for it. And moreover, the generic disparity between personal narrative and lyric poetry – where one re-presents my truth the other monumentalizes its immediacy – prevents a relaxed cross-pollination of the two. In looking back, it strikes me as poignant that these insecurities and technical inadequacies manifested in response to Williams, a poet who spent much of his later career revising Book One of his long poem Paterson, burdened by his overwrought desire “to write in a larger way than of the birds and flowers, to write about the people close about me: to know in detail, minutely what I was talking about—to the whites of their eyes, to their very smells” (6).
A poem often quoted for the line “poetry makes nothing happen,” W.H. Auden ends “In Memory of W.B. Yeats” gesturing to the genre’s apostrophic ability to “survive, a way of happening, a mouth” (52). Such a mouth shoots the breeze with both Szarkowski’s intuitively brilliant embark and the work of William Eggleston it introduces. Conventionally unfamiliar in their framing and off-kilter composition, the images in William Eggleston’s Guide incited critics, teethed on the gelatin of Stieglitz and Nadar, to pan the Memphis photographer’s vernacular work as mere snapshots. “A snapshot...Heightened from life, / yet paralyzed by fact” writes Robert Lowell. In rebuttal, Eggleston argues:

I am afraid there are more people than I can imagine who can go no further than appreciating a picture that is a rectangle with an object in the middle of it, which they can identify... they want something obvious. Blindness is apparent when someone lets slip the word ‘snapshot.’ Ignorance can always be covered by ‘snapshot.’ The word never had any meaning... I am at war with the obvious. (Democratic Forrest, 163)

Here, Eggleston addresses a replica of “the executives” from Auden’s “In Memory of W.B. Yeats,” who, having wandered “into the valley of [the poem/photograph’s] making” advocate its expulsion from the Republic (52). Obviousness suggests pre-judgment, and in that regard, I cannot help but consider the significance of titling a book William Eggleston’s Guide. Surely we are meant to revere the images as the American South according to Mr.
Eggleston. However, the longer I look at it the more I understand the designation as Eggleston’s admission of unfamiliarity with the familiar. These dye transfers guide his transfer from what home was to what it is and back across. We are given both the obvious and the obscured. The “with” in “I am at war with the obvious” suddenly embraces a sense of allied forces. Eggleston is an Odysseus; William Eggleston’s Guide signals his cartographic quest, a map of digressions.
In Democratic Forest, he compares taking pictures with the viewfinder removed to firing a shotgun: “Unlike a rifle, where you carefully aim, following a dot or a scope, with a shotgun it’s done with feel. With a fluid movement, your body follows a moving target and the gun keeps moving after the shot with what is know as follow through... the opposite of the rational method” (64). If Eggleston is guiding me these images are guiding him. I follow his follow-through, and in each image I hear Virgil exclaiming, “you have reached / the place past which my powers cannot see” (Purg., XXVII, 127). In each landscape, I hear an ancestral humming, you have reached the “raw towns that we believe and die in” (52).

Henri Cartier Bresson’s photographs astound with their miraculous attention to the ephemeral, whereas Eggleston’s uneventful structures mark the sparse instances of human absence. In questioning these unpopulated images of misspelt graffiti, yard-sprawled toys, dilapidated cribs, scattered puzzle pieces and tattered shoes, I found an enduring presence that bridged the generic gap separating personal narrative and lyric poetry. In attending to this enduring presence, a way of writing jutted out from the rubble of the workbench. I was able to survive The Old Place as a way of happening, a mouth, a personal narrative that is overheard. If I am to name this enduring presence, it could only be home. This presence extends beyond the ekphrastic poems I have written in response to William Eggleston's Guide and encompasses, as well, my earlier work. The occasion for those poems seems closely attuned to what Robert Hass writes in his introduction to Robinson Jeffers' Rock and Hawk, "It is the fate of American poets to reinvent the religions of their childhoods in their poetry." While writing these poems, I was not necessarily reinventing the spirituality of my father, a part-time lay minister, but the quotidian habits of his church. By conflating my father's two worlds - the poly bag plant, where he works, and the sanctuary, where he worships - I noticed the pragmatism shared by both institutions. In this respect, the practice of speaking in tongues began to rhyme with the bag machine malfunctioning, as both threaten with collapse the nomos of their respective association.

In the account given of Williams, and likewise the nativist polemics of the Fugitives, I resented seeing History subordinated by Nature. Contemporarily the "South" is less a geographic region than an antiphon of tourism, Dollywood; commercialism, McDonald's Southern Style Chicken Sandwich; and nostalgic cocktails of individualism and myth, Dave Smith. Where I hope these poems depart from other engagements with the south, that confuse the constructed and the inherent at every turn, is in my adherence to Wendell Berry's proposal for regionalism, "a local life aware of itself" (56).
Many thanks to Claudia Keelan, Don Revell and Nick LoLordo, whose mentorship energized these exchanges.
NOTES

till
...And I made a rural pen.
-William Blake

For me color is an artifice, a cosmetic like the kind used to paint corpses.
- Roland Barthes
William Eggleston’s Guide
Morton, Mississippi

Book open to bone-looking tree. River turning out its deep pockets

On the nightstand irises make themselves at home in a clear tincture

Where echoes sleep together with apparatus a mnemonic man is emptied of lungs. A child is getting his tail tanned with tubes The smell of rain is letting up and I cannot sleep or look at the elderly attached to oxygen tubes in casinos without my back pockets coming together, without hearing this man refer to a bed of irises as flags, or the way the verse in his hands carries me to cords:

I bought some flags in Reno where your body is still the color of pine and on every broken down tree we see rabbits and snakes tame on account of being hungry so long
W.E. Guide
Whitehaven, Mississippi

What this long motel can’t feel with its stains she discovers in her naked body smearing makeup onto rented linens.

Dusk is a stadium of native tongues telepathically speaking, “don’t be so hard on yourself for the parks keeping their hours and nativity scenes seeming out of place in early March.” Everything I touches turns to skin. Somnolent winds. Shoelace - tied to the vent’s grate. Talk about memory, talk about pleasure - if it is flaccid, the air ain’t working

Turning back to God, spray-painted on the wall the G coils into a 6; he faces W.E. flaccid

The night the ceiling scratched her scalp, pleasure could be heard in the walls, where it was written paper thin; making scenes out of seems memory takes pictures of Polaroids as they turn the purple of dreams galloping over reams of milk spilt

If you tie a string around your finger it turns this color. The shutter stutters out a reassembled dusk. Take shelter. Take a picture of your last government check Consider the Ravens

I. Clear Thoughts

The bridge burns, throwing day into night When I set out, I knew what it was to arrive: acupuncture makes its way to Music City

Tomorrow belongs to the bag machine malfunctioning. The past is a polyurethane ocean. At the plant, the pressman tells me if you drown in your work, they'll have to cut the most beautiful thing out of your lungs

Whelm without medical attention cuts strychnine with the weight of speech Selame kalaqui Selame Selame kattalaqui jon flog reido

Somewhere an angel is being skinned alive in rumor mills, and weather makes fun of machines, curling irons toasters. A beautiful girl in halfway house stitches curtains out of baby clothes believing if she were to step back and pull one foot out of this world and one foot out of the other, she would stop burning stop breathing, stop reading so much into roots left dangling in the air

After the rain, the lord hath said there is rain in the way you talk Go out and rent the porn of tractors

And the lord hath said when a man in the poly bag plant says be careful the job you are about to do should not be done
II. Carry into the machine the voice of being caught

The pressman speaks:
That there's the seal bar
We call her the hot-knife Running upwards of seven hundred degrees. She's a jewel. Gots to hear her out

No voice at all, only song of biting down as if in pain and releasing bag after bag The clear breath is cut and sealed. Cauterizing I've heard it called

Rendered one from another Stretch out your arms; the blade is longer with a heat could pull you from yourself

Bite down on clear breath

This is the lift of one hundred articulate tongues, boxed to be shipped, fulfilling the word of ends meeting their maker. Clear breath of this plant presses against cardboard palette

Taste the voice of being caught
I can assure you it aint no scream
I can assure you it aint no scream
That blade'll cut you clear in half The voice of being caught:
I see you in there
III. Here I Raise my Ebenezer

Sleep just jumped up on me.
Inside the bag plant the hot knife cuts the poly seals the halves, wakes his children with what sounds like coughing

a clearing of throat

If I ever get so I can't work. I'll want you to come over and shoot me in my sleep but do it the day before I call you so as I don't see it coming

To recline is to stretch out Recline. Stretch out: I is evidence in the absence of seal the bag takes on sleep's physical shape a rending of ends a recliner characterized by a father's father's absent head greasy blemish, congenital blot, there to see there to see through Hope like everything else you have swallowed this isn’t permanent onemississippi twowomississippi thousands of motorists traveling I 40 just east of the city glance at the impressively close J. Percy Priest Dam

fivemississippi six children steal batteries from fire alarms, touching them to their tongues onethousand one hundred and ten tennessee families gradually relocated, when the state flooded the valley. Dwellings and barns sold

To kiss the terminal is to need the word to take the taste of tongue from your mouth

ninety-five tennessee graves were moved Little families Seventeen cemeteries carried no names

halfway through the prayer
I notice we were asked to bow our eyes and close our heads

If the family insists the state leaves the body where it is Whatever Tickles your Fiscal

The hallway nests the daylights out of me. When the blind pose for photographs they know how one feels. Sock footed preacher reasons how cotton can be eaten, plucked pink after the first sentence wizens into print: plates spinning under a tent in one artery of the delta. In my dreams forgetting to lock your doors restocks the view your windows rest against

In epilepsy and Wal-Mart we see ourselves as one digital one with one digital one to grow on, muttering this is where language stops and starts blinking. Slow down America, doctor-it-up
W.E. Guide
Tallahatchie County

W.E. snaps a child faceless from her playhouse doorway. Morning, just clearing the fencerow, restores it in the American Whistler, surrounded by dead grass producing the entrails of peasant homes where like our lungs, light only sheds light when death needs an eye on the shucking hand

Tearing sieves from the breathing tubes Whelm flicks them into water From this smallest of bodies billows the unprocessed rank of field hospitals

Is nothing more baptismal than the camera shy for good cause? Before there was anything but children and wind chimes I will have heard the cleansing roil of T erecting a home-place from memory breathing tubes and children's books Each trach is inspiring. I-think-I-can- I-think-can Lincoln Logs cooked clean as a whistle, bloodless as saw-dust Children's books in this house meant books children had gotten in to with pen, circling till they tire or tear through

Leave me
to the typing paper stored in air-tight bins where humidity lets it alone

In the feral colony, we're told feral means fearful. On the road back to Music City, heat lightning Doors boiling over into splinters and someone is caught living out the sound of silos Where no one owes no favors, tradition's a table waiting to be set. Enter it as you would an angel built outside with fish hooks. Where handwriting is a whore-hating ghost, you sign your name son of man

Trailer for

Spider web on the hedges I wanted to see you naked on his cold leather couch Four o'clocks open late and release their fragrance throughout our conclusions about concrete nails.
If there is no make believe in heaven, there is in the afternoon Words cleaned out of me, it's true:
I mailed a blank missive to you

Spider web on the hedges What you see here and what makes you suffer belongs to Amateur Photography, prayer that folds so tight we mishear "overcast days" for "open caskets" and "can you touch your toes?" for "can you color your hair until it makes me hard?" I have budgeted $40 a year for movies, and even if I blow $60, the plan holds as true as I am sweet on you
W.E. Guide,
Near Morton, Mississippi

Of course he is in fact it's in the air conditioning that I laid eyes upon God

The way the outskirts appear in a bottle of ipecac, and the land doesn't remember an old friend from a former one. Count no Count knew his days were numbered when his wife asked to paint them thinking this likeness will be the one that rivets our senses to the rain our birthmarks to the workbench

Once the past that was not perished, she installed window units and prayed of walls perspiring measure of myth in the lay of abandoned plots, measure of days in the middle of one or the other Whelm remembered her introduction to good eyes and roads. Back when the land’s place was in the unspoken request and the photograph is as we speak

A Dime that Doesn't

Above the bears breaking muscle loose from a stream, colder than the dead sustaining them; planes cross the country's t. A woman rides in the letter next to me, another in the letter I am drafting on an air sick bag

With every false start, the voice on the other end becomes larger The sky is a landfill for such things: sins we no longer name. Each word sets the animal's teeth in plaster. In panting we till its ingrown tongue
The Cuss of Place

T's son leaves his mark on the mocking bird's hide in a place visible to the bird by mirror

When it pecks at the spot I shout for my mother and she slams her hand in a car door, holding it

I had never heard
Long Live the Kane

A garden came, and we burnt it for in its piles of silence occasionally, our lives came up missing / for air. Belief outgrows its aliases. Sugar scratches at the bottom of our skulls an aging rapper slapping-- together flows

Cot Damn

Watch out or I'll have you steering with your knees clap-happy with the radio screaming out we got the beat we got the beat, we got the beat. Yea, we didn't rent Don't Look Back. We water colored in a park, all white and black. For contrast busted blocks rendered unto us cheese balls, the old kind that come in a can and blush allover the sheets the help slept in. One crass hurrah would have been grand Bobby Pin, then again

Till Human Voices Wake Us

Says Sonny replaced the lights in the education building at church with new florescent bulbs

Says they look so much better you can actually see to walk down the hall

Says Ms. Geneva found herself washing fingerprints off the walls where she couldn’t see them before
Labor Ready

They sit you down with your dead ends. in tongues of one to five:
How likely are you to be dismissed from a job for fighting?

How good are you at fighting?

One being. I have no idea, Five being I cannot lose The color of angels they claim my piss is unclean There's no way I'm sure of your being okay if n' when the plant closes

The n between if 'n when is to say each 'n to his own

The T between John and Moore is not initial Sharecropper can't be expected to name all his children twice. T's son drives I around in a pick up stomping grounds, fair grounds Berry Hill

the parts behind the parts of I was raised in these parts Think of the T on the headstone and what

Dr. Anderson said at the funeral I see death everywhere
Other peoples' fears frighten me Pyrrhic
   after Ross McElwee

Behind the wheel with the top down your head centers
a hurtling landscape

Persons seen abandoning animals at this site will be prosecuted

How many first sexual experiences can one woman have
Sew & Sew

I mark my place in Bibles from one inn to another way out – with a Hello My Name Is
humming so strongly of it Performance

"Once History inhabits a crazy house, egoism may be the last tool left to History"

Norman Mailer

I, on the other hand, am in service to the horseshoe hanging over the shed door

I sip runoff potlicker poured over a photo album

I wipe my mouth on a newspaper that reports: If Tennessee was to excise Shelby County, the state's public school system would rise to the low 20s in national rankings

I knock off twenty minutes early and call it cool-down time

I ask spring if it is coherent and notice

I am all talk

I rears its own form on a chalkboard with industrial staccato

A SHORT MAN IS AN OXYMORON BUT STILL A MAN

I attribute the quote to a headless statue

I see every day on my way to where I stay

I make the house smell of dolls

I listen to soft paper when I need to hear a man wrapped in flames

I expect a miracle every time he gets to the part about Percy Priest Lake

I remove the inhalator and his face comes off with it

I swap eyes with the yard jockey and he tells me,

"I can't sleep knowing I must go back out there"

I keep smashing clear through cock-crow

I assumed genitals were present. Later, I discovered genitals were impossible I cannot be certain of where anything originates unless I sit in a room with someone till they no longer exist I go to the library when I am homeless I go to the bathroom when I am good and ready I knew she was faking. We'd talked about it I am no hunter, so I'm told I, as it happens, is the hardest part of hearing your own voice I feed lines to a wall-eyed lesbian who can't keep "It's The End of the World as We Know It" together I write about seeing fall, "When the shotguns burn woodstoves I feel the hoses turned loose inside of me, blowing the trash out" I wash my mouth out with a map
Covenant and Loving It

In the heart of the stomach-colored country side, ice falls from an awning and bread breaks a bitch's leg

On both sides of a bomb threat, sandbags roar in remembrance of the ocean's floor. Suffer the dream where you stand to be done in by dreams Into a pattern in the key of hot knives a sea of glass stained, levees shatter

Let 'er Rip

She pulls another name this time from the dead

The weight of covered dishes is the weight of dropping them onto the fellowship hall’s simonized floors. Light shines through accidents imaginary as all get out

My cousins book to the sprinkler’s edge where headstones swear the unreferenced shadow of its clock-wise spew

When they ask, I tell them

I have forgotten how a staring contest works
Bystander

When a hole in the map bursts into flame

piss on my grave a slow legato

of pollen describes the mind when the prescribed dies home becomes the medicine they ask us to pour down the drain

Chanticleer
   for Jonathan Williams

Hey, Ladonna, who do you think would win in a fight between Scooby Doo and Aunt Jemima?

I don't think she'd fight a dog
Lasting Impression

The hotel baked cookies all day Heaven is singing where you have no business

Lowman on the totem pole swapped a hot sheet for cold, took off when Alejandro's fingerprints went up in fumes. Sing for the hatchlings wrapped in a wash cloth soaked in bleach

Sing for the flying low, for the tumbled rack of tourist pamphlets. See Rock City and the clouds break over the deep end, where the sound of a player piano powwows with your own heart beat

In the Boot Corral a bride-to-be towels off in the nude, while

Tootsie's Wild Orchids Lounge in the unfastened stay The broken watch worn in habit. Split olives in the fig tree's shade.
We press out sunburns and the pale impressions flash A fountain, yielding salt and fresh gurgles through handfuls of olives A dress up her crack, as T's son tells it

The man in the pew behind her explains his two black eyes: I pulled the bunch out and she turned to waylay me Well, how did you get the second I figured she wanted it there so I shoved it back. The bit in the horse's mouth. The area outside of Jerusalem where trash was carried and burned
Poem

preacher to preacher’s wife: I’m sorry I need understanding that’s what soloist to the sound man: When we attached a tape recorder to my failings, we recorded over your successes

ushers to the others:
  The ceiling is healing

into an open wound

born-again to the unborn: Where the tape is

I can hear what the hell is
Steeple People

1. Here's the church
   Here's the people Open up your
   a) hearts
   b) purses
   c) wallets
   d) all of the above
   we need a new steeple

2. Here's the organist Here she's calling Street-people in the fellowship hall
   A Room in the Inn

   Becoming, meeting one's end or maker

3. With each donation, a name will be etched onto one of six glass panes

4. Hug n' Howdy Time Revival, Prayer Request
   Offertory Hymn
   Responsive Reading
   Profession of Faith
   Might near everything can be called

31 5.

What will we call and is buried in the spire

6.

Here are the children
   Here they're singing
Do lord o do lord o
   Do you remember me Nothing is called to my knowledge

a room in one's end
   or maker
As Rich as Croesus

Call the cracks creases In Roman Holiday, workers putty the cathedral steps Eliza Doolittle splays across

In America, an eighteen year old creases a map of Ethiopia, coerced by her father to holiday in Italy, where she searched steps for putty, but instead finds cracks I wanted Atticus Finch’s suit to stride through that square to sweat through my creases

Eliza to Higgins: an inhuman noise of cell phones sending lip puckered pics. I crack and reply screen captured Doolittle Peck g’nite Snapper Jessiessippi

For good news spreading commerce leaves need

The further he went out of his mind, gathering influence, the deeper upon returning home

he tills the jukebox With enough pressure to make mirrors
into believers, he sings:
The south is the oldest place on earth. It has been in the Wal-Mart the longest Aux Animaux Domestiques
  after Michel Foucault to be — gin with the thought that bears the stamp of an age: the wild profusion of existing things. An embalmed et cetera. Having just broken the water pitcher, my saliva speaks,

  What has been removed in short, is the famous operating table

  Utopias afford no real locality and so the slick mind stirs under our feet Propinquity

after Renee Gladman

While the world slept, they robbed us blind

Each to each, a community renames itself disaster relief:
"even our thieves lost everything"

Looking out for the uninterrupted drone of clothes that somehow talk all at once in a salt shaker of sound, people movers, so fast we catch ourselves

wanting cologne to pour from a radio. Call it Sex Machine

   Call it snake hole, where when I was a child, I ran a garden hose remembering a boy done in by syringe filled with air

   The mob mentality only works if one of us is spared Ezra P. to Michael V.
One could confuse the hyacinth ablaze of its own accord and the child’s head engulfed as the center. Trees at their varicose best pumping nothing into the air save the slightest scent of his leaving, unyielding honesty and eyeglasses tubes up the nose the breathing machine does not make air its icy embouchure sticks to my vision proof they touched and tore us lidless
A cropped cloud and a sense of what is there to see here once I stops looking, a sign that says nothing reads King Cotton Beverage Co Inc and another Open and another too small to make out. Water tower and the idea of today stands taller the closer you get to it. Before it gets too high tie a string to the stem long enough to soak up the bridle-deep blood of military personnel: a hell I once saw described in a unisex bathroom

Someone etching a bible verse which someone comes upon later and adds only in the south would you find a bible verse on the stall and I cannot help but add another level of removal, etching only in the south a person references the south as an etc, etc, string that makes the mind bearable

Crutchfield saw this spot on his dead friend’s chest where the treatment still eats, unlike a cigarette butt, the color of one still crying, searching for its bearings with the light that shimmers up.
Spare change at the bottom of a brim fed pond.
Fill a flowerpot with water and somebody’s sure to empty their pockets into it Skin/Within

_after Charles Olson_

The virtually put out our eyes in the umbrage oranges and still more oranges in the tree's cast shadow

I wants to leave us speechless with a speech

In one of the laundry room's otherwise empty washers I found a stranger's knock-off name brand hoodie that looked so good it reminded me of the real one I had as a child

When they moved my neighbors forgot to unplug & pack up their alarm clock
It buzzes an empty apartment orange

How to pull the soaking wet button-up from the washer using only the soaking wet button-up to leave us speechless

but that only resulted in an empty apartment act equivalent to affect

        I writes on a mirror in dry-erase. It is better to ask for forgiveness than permission when applying lipstick to nap with another woman

Not that I is a woman though if I were you might not have left children outside after dark means in the dark I say awkward awkward you say it

    AWEkWORD

AGAIN I got you AGAIN a thousand years of death to be put into the hands of mystery move not a muscle in the effort of relocating heaven and earth

Keys thrown upon finding out I was afraid I shattered a mirror or scuffed the floor in professor's house you were sitting to pick up the pieces pick apart from either/or image/sound heaven/earth in either/and an orange is the being peeled off the lint trap slipped I's mind so succinctly

    so I pulls wet clothes from the dryer

40
Heathen

Cold, the sparrow curses in treble clef.
The florist has one arm and can’t remember how the lime kiln hands down lime. The dark dries brighter than the hill-top temple, Gnostic movie theater where everything gets old if you do it often enough. On sanctuary steps, a boy throws himself down a forged hymn.
This is where locals splurge their bones into the lake and tradition eats them.
This is where I wash my face
Percy Priest

Early so that when dreams are divvied out you get the one where you recognize your mother. A man stands near the first remove, going on about head injuries and light coming from the operator's shed.
It hurts listening to him the pain of grapes swallowed whole, the memory of our flat chests sepia-toned in sopping baptismal robes. Come June I will return to the peace sign we carved into that mulberry branch. By then, it will have healed into a snake. He asks if I think they use current from the dam or if the operator has his own generator inside. This is the government we're talking about

Young Avenue Napkin

In the bassinet of shiver, I pull money out of a machine, supple as wrapping paper smoldering in a barrel, where hair singes the way lightning starts on earth, retreats to sky, the way the balance on my account escapes into the registers of all the omens I polish off
Arise, Shine

Armature in the peripheries, a house pointing east with windows so hot humans wake on beds stripped bare. None of them got to college, one was held hostage as a child by her father. T, according to T's son, spoke of drunks breaking and entering, turning the old place into a club house. In the repose of running a still, playing cards catch fire, and a muralist's daughter retraces her steps from factory farm to family tree. Where did I leave my keys?

Armature in the peripheries, his idea of Eden was spider eggs strung from ceiling to ceiling fan.
Some organs of sight are not, he'd insist, noodle but thread, so we kneel where the land revives your name.
Strewer of synapses. Flipper of switches.
The silt around your eyes sparkles when she listens. Who is to blame if I wait to wash the feet of the dead till they are dead and have no need for feet? Sand gets into everything the televised speech, the roaring drunk.
Crazy Eights

We are accustomed to hearing small children, but the one he ran over in his car was quite large Divorced his wife – started over with a comb and a son. So I hear the women squeal away the mirror’s fog licking the chaffs of their palms

I’d wager half of all baptisms are do-overs. Men watching brico blocks in broad daylight

Quiet, his mouth and flagship tattoo point to shock therapy and the small engines it leaves in disrepair
W.E. Guide

Huntsville, Alabama

Still a photographer behind this war with the obvious, still the sun streams another way behind us both. The closest elms burgeon sweaty and bright

Amending what we cannot say with what they let us see; tree non-tree yesterday, the Air National Guard uprooted

Their search lights and chain link, and now there is a shadow called rustling, and now there is a swarm of catfish days spent reading: treatise on the breeding pains that snap the bough. Oceanic chamber pot hissing with song I has never heard, moves I because it touches memory purposefully

A man in company clothes wiping dust from the nape of a retired jet fighter

Oil spots make him think of weather Glory,
I will wait for you by the vending machines
Skill & Live

After the new wore off, their children began adding and taking words away, learning how it was cults were made, how the same fingers ape rock, paper, scissors, can pluck the flame right off the wick, believing if it’s ripe enough if you’re just that slick, you can eat the bud

In an exit-ramp-abandoned Ford, they breathe smoke. Memory of sleep escapes as they empty their pockets, trying to remember the book before they monkeyed with it Visitors linger in the hospital’s parking garage till the storm passes by Heaven, one says, has us pegged
W.E. Guide

Black Bayou Plantation, near Glendora, Mississippi

Gypsy pigeons gone to pieces in the revolving doors are not pictured

The white floors at my back breathe swaddling T through their strapping arms

White jugs on a gravel drive a hitch in my giddy-up, rackabone in my throat

The last thing he ate, snack cakes and spare ribs from the hospital vending machine, clings to love's loud unprotected limn Stinking of tomorrow's rain the clouds foam at the mouth

W.E. Guide
Tallahatchie County

In heat, those who cling to guns and religion return to decorate the graves For Christ's sake, Charles in his paid-cash Cadillac pulls quarters from ears and keeps them

Traw is a purple heart, holds forth by creak bed His shadow felled clear cross barbwire What's burnt into the retina believe you me will always be there in the middle of the air A woman knows when her hairnet has fallen into the grinder. Fingers wring through her permanent. She knows someone will have to pay for the thousand pounds of pig that will rot in the jungle of dumpsters

A boy sneaking up on a sleeping dog stamps as hard as he can on the rock where the stray sprawls

The sky has seen it all once, and we are there when the farmer rifles her open and the boys come running up a hill to hear how he had to do it, how he had no idea what could have scared
that dog that crazy

I don’t know what to tell you, Virginia cept keep looking
VITA

Graduate College
University of Nevada, Las Vegas

Jonathan Peter Moore

Home Address:
4441 Escondido Street
Apartment 4205
Las Vegas, Nevada 89119

Degrees:
Bachelor of Arts, English, 2003
Rhodes College, Memphis

Special Honors and Awards:
Travel Grant for Scholarly Presentation, 2008
University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

Travel Grant for Scholarly Research, 2007
University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

Publications:

"Behind the Blue Yodel" Rain Taxi (Fall 2008. Special issue on Frank Stanford)

"Dream of Alluvial Field: an interview with Bill Willett" Rain Taxi (Fall 2008. Special issue on Frank Stanford)

Thesis Title: till

Thesis Examination Committee:
Chairperson, Dr. Donald Revell, Ph. D.
Committee Member, Dr. V. Nicholas LoLordo, Ph.D.
Committee Member, Prof. Claudia Keelan, M.F.A.
Graduate Faculty Representative, Prof. Catherine Angel, M.F.A.