

Danielle Endres Bio

Danielle Endres' research and teaching interests lie in rhetorical criticism, environmental communication, social movements, and Native American cultures. She is currently exploring four research areas. First, Danielle is writing a book about the rhetoric of nuclear waste siting decisions, in particular focusing on the Yucca Mountain site and the Skull Valley site. Second, she is also directing an oral history project: Nuclear Technology in the American West that is collecting and archiving the stories of people involved in nuclear issues, particularly nuclear waste, in the American West. Third, Danielle is a co-director of a national research project on climate change activism that focuses on the Step It Up 2007 campaign. Finally, she is involved the Water/Energy Nexus Initiative, an interdisciplinary group that examines water and energy usage and policy in the West. Danielle received her Ph.D. in Communication from the University of Washington, her M.A. in Communication from San Diego State University, and her B.A. in History from the University of Oregon.
