ACT I

The story of “The Magic Flute” opens Act I, with Tamino endeavouring to escape from a huge snake. He trips in running and falls unconscious. Hearing his cries for help, three black-garbed Ladies-in-Waiting of the Queen of the Night appear and kill the snake with their spears. Quite unwillingly they leave the handsome youth, who, on recovering consciousness, see dancing towards him an odd-looking man entirely covered with feathers. It is Papageno, a bird-catcher. He tells the astonished Tamino that this is the realm of the Queen of the Night. Nor, seeing that the snake is dead, does he hesitate to boast that it was he who killed the monster. For this lie he is immediately punished. The three Ladies-in-waiting reappear and place a padlock on his mouth. Then they show Tamino the miniature of a maiden, whose magical beauty at once fills his heart with ardent love. Enter the Queen of the Night. She tells Tamino the portrait is that of her daughter, Pamina, who has been taken from her by a wicked sorcerer, Sarastro. She has chosen Tamino to deliver the maiden and as a reward he will receive her hand in marriage. The queen then disappears and the three Ladies-in-waiting come back. They take the padlock from Papageno’s mouth, give him a set of chimes and Tamino a golden flute. By the aid of these magical instruments they will be able to escape the perils of their journey, on which they will be accompanied by three youths or genii.

Change of scene. A richly furnished apartment in Sarastro’s palace is disclosed. A brutal Moor, Monastatos, is pursuing Pamina with unwelcome attentions. The appearance of Papageno puts him to flight. The bird-catcher recognizes Pamina as the daughter of the Queen of the Night, and assures her that she will soon be rescued. In the meantime the Three Youths guide Tamino to a grove where three temples stand. He is driven away from the doors of two, but at the third there appears a priest who informs him that Sarastro is no tyrant, no wicked sorcerer as the Queen had warned him, but a man of wisdom and of noble character.

The sound of Papageno’s voice arouses Tamino from the meditations inspired by the words of the priest. He hastens forth and seeks to call his companion by playing on his flute. Papageno is not alone. He is trying to escape with Pamina, but is prevented by the appearance of Monostatos and some slaves, who endeavour to seize them. But Papageno sets the Moor and his slaves dancing by playing on his magic chimes.

Trumpet blasts announce the coming of Sarastro. Pamina falls at the feet of the High Priest and explains that she was trying to escape the unwelcome attentions of the Moor. The latter now drags Tamino in, but instead of the reward he expects, receives a sound flogging. By the command of Sarastro, Tamino and Pamina are brought into the Temple of Ordeals, where they must prove that they are worthy of the higher happiness.
ACT II

In the Palm Grove. Sarastro informs the priests of the plans which he has laid. The gods have decided that Pamina shall become the wife of the noble youth Tamino. Tamino, however, must prove, by his own power, that he is worthy of admission to the Temple. Therefore Sarastro has taken under his protection Pamina, daughter of the Queen of the Night, to whom is due all darkness and superstition. But the couple must go through severe ordeals in order to be worthy of entering the Temple of Light, and thus of thwarting the sinister machinations of the Queen.

In the succeeding scenes we see these fabulous ordeals, which Tamino, with the assistance of his magic flute and his own purity of purpose, finally overcomes in company with Pamina. Darkness is banished and the young couple enter into the light of the Temple of the Sun. Papageno also fares well, for he receives Papageno for wife.

There is much nonsense and even buffoonery in “The Magic Flute”; and, in spite of real nobility in the role and music of Sarastro, Mr. Krehbiel’s comment that the piece should be regarded as somewhat in the same category as a Christmas pantomine is by no means far-fetched. It lends itself to elaborate production, and spectacular performances of it have been given at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Its representation requires for the role of Astrofiammante, Queen of the Night, a soprano of extraordinarily high range and agility of voice, as each of the two great airs of this vengeful lady extends to high F and are so brilliant in style that one associates with them almost anything but the dire outpouring of threats their text is intended to convey. They were composed because Mozart’s sister-in-law, Josepha Weber (Mme. Hofer) was in the cast of the first performance and her voice was such as has been described above. The Queen has an air in Act I and another in Act II. A quotation from the second, the so-called “Vengeance aria,” will show the range and brilliancy of voice required of a singer in the role of Astrofiammante.

Directors Notes

I am extremely happy to be making my debut with UNLV Opera Theatre directing Mozart’s THE MAGIC FLUTE. During my career, this masterpiece has been a favorite of mine and several years ago I had the fortune to have sung the role of Papagena at Utah Festival Opera opposite, UNLV Professor and Baritone, Tod Fitzpatrick.

While approaching my concept for the opera, I looked at the masonic motifs that help to define the story and music. It is well documented that Mozart was a member of a Masonic Lodge in Vienna for a total of seven years. During this time he attained the rank of “Master Mason”, and during this period he composed many musical pieces for the brotherhood. However, it was Mozart’s final opera, The Magic Flute, that some have described as “an Enlightenment allegory, veiled in Masonic ritual.” The story, based on a fable by Wieland, contains characters and circumstances that involve the mysterious worship of Isis, the deity of the ancient Egyptians. Although the libretto is full of fantasy, improbable happenings and absurdities, it is full of symbols and references of actual rituals of Freemasonry. The number three, for example, has a significant importance to the Masons and is evident throughout the opera (3 ladies, 3 spirits, 3 temples, 3 trumpet calls, pyramids). In addition, there are many “pairs of opposites” woven into the story and music. The struggle between evil and good; light and dark; silence and idle chatter; youth and age coupled with Mozart’s writing for the Queen of the Night, which utilizes the opera’s highest most extreme vocal type: the coloratura soprano, contrasting the High Priest Sarastro, the lowest of operatic voice types: the bass.

Following the fantasy, extreme contrasts and mysterious symbolism in this story, I chose to set the opera in the original time period, in Ancient Egypt. To offset the Egyptian and Masonic elements of the story, I have created “classical muses”, 6 dancers, who serve to give a “nod” to the 18th Century, add a visual and physical dimension to the staging and serve as scenic movers. Finally, I believe the key themes of the story to be: Love, Forgiveness, Tolerance and the Brotherhood of Man. I have enjoyed working with this talented cast and staff to create characters, staging, movement and scenic elements that all support these major themes. It is my wish that you will enjoy this delightful, moving and beautiful opera.
