

Website Review

<http://online.casinocity.com>

Online Casino City

Reviewed by Betty McNeal

For a central place to access online and interactive gaming information there is not a more convenient or comprehensive website than Online Casino City. Though Internet information is often unverified from an academic point of view, it can be accurate and in the case of online gambling often skirted by authorities, the Internet may be the best source available. Online Casino City comes from Casino City Press, a reputable publisher of casino directories, electronic and paper. In addition to basic facts the site contains links to official regulating bodies for direct access to industry regulation and operation.

This site is an education in itself detailing the wide variety of online gaming: online casinos, poker sites, sports and racebooks, betting exchanges, bingo sites, lotteries, skill games, and backgammon. Online gaming news can be found here and is updated daily. Online gaming software companies are listed with descriptions of their products.

Of special interest is the link: Jurisdictions. Here online gaming countries are listed, described and ranked by popularity. Brief information for each jurisdiction includes the number of English sites, licensing fees, game types and more. In sidebars you will find names of regulatory agencies along with contact information and related web sites. Some regulations are linked thus providing quick access to specifics that govern online gaming in places where it is sanctioned. One can often find the date online gaming began in a jurisdiction, license fees for companies, fees for key personnel, tax rates on gross profit and other relevant data. You may have to sidestep the ads and links for online players but the factual core of this website seems reliable.

Casino City, Inc. has itself become the focus of an important online gaming issue in its suit against the U. S. Department of Justice which sought to ban online gaming ads by companies not in the gambling business, such as Casino City. Casino City maintains that gaming advertising is protected free speech under the U. S. Constitution. You can learn more about this case or sign up for email news of other First Amendment online gaming cases at the site.

While the United States seems to be stuck with an avoidance approach or a knee-jerk reaction against online gaming or strict prohibitions, Online Casino City provides a reality check about the rest of the world showing how the online gaming industry actually works. The statistics and other valuable resources on this website make it one to bookmark and refer to often. Co-existing with all the laws, cases, studies, debates and theories about Internet gambling are some hard to find facts now available at Online Casino City.